Foreword

The 2019 Electoral Pocketbook is a comprehensive guide to the 2019 federal election. A federal election is perhaps the biggest peacetime logistical event in Australia and the scale and complexity of the task is growing. The 2019 federal election was the largest and one of the most complex elections the Australian Electoral Commission (AEC) has ever delivered.

The electoral roll was the most complete in our history with an enrolment rate of 97 per cent, which was the result of hard work by the AEC and a clear indicator of strong democratic health. The voting period also went very well with a growth in turnout at 91.89 per cent. In absolute terms, more than 800,000 additional Australians voted in 2019 compared with the 2016 federal election.

As well as being large in scale, the 2019 federal election was extraordinarily complex. Global trends are contributing to a difficult and evolving electoral environment for democracies, including mounting security concerns, changing citizen expectations, and 24 hour social media commentary.

The AEC had robust measures in place to ensure the integrity and security of the 2019 federal election, including our cyber security program to help reduce the risk of cyber-attacks on election systems. The Electoral Integrity Assurance Taskforce (a multi-agency body) was also in operation for the first time at a federal election to support the integrity of the election. The AEC also implemented a groundbreaking social media campaign for the first time, called Stop and Consider, encouraging voters to critically analyse what they see, hear and read to avoid being misled by disinformation.

The AEC also implemented a number of key changes in the lead up to the election. Following a series of high-profile eligibility issues involving members and senators, an eligibility qualification checklist was introduced and administered by the AEC. The checklist was initially voluntary, but became mandatory for the 2019 federal election. The AEC also implemented two further sets of legislative amendments including: new electoral advertising and authorisation measures; and reforms to funding and disclosure laws. Also, and for the first time in our history, the AEC established a nationally coordinated system to support the supply, distribution and return of election materials and equipment, which proved successful.

This Pocketbook includes data on the types of votes cast, formal and informal votes, election funding and financial disclosure at the 2019 federal election. The Pocketbook also serves as an educational resource, with historical information about Australia's electoral system and processes, brief notes about every electoral division, an explanation of counting votes and the nomination process, as well as information about redistributions and referendums.

I trust you will find this Pocketbook an informative resource on the 2019 federal election, contributing to the transparency and integrity of the electoral process and results. To help us improve future editions, we welcome your feedback on this publication via the AEC website.

The Australian Electoral Commission

1.0 The Australian Electoral Commission

The Australian Electoral Commission (AEC) was established on 21 February 1984, following major amendments to the Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918 (the Electoral Act).

The AEC is an independent, statutory authority responsible for administering the Electoral Act and the Referendum (Machinery Provisions) Act 1984. The AEC conducts federal elections and referendums, and maintains the Commonwealth Electoral Roll.

The AEC has one key outcome:

Maintain an impartial and independent electoral system for eligible voters through active electoral roll management, efficient delivery of polling services and targeted education and public awareness programs.

It achieves this by:

- conducting successful electoral events, including federal elections, by-elections and referendums
- ensuring confidence in the electoral roll
- administering political party registrations and financial disclosure
- undertaking public awareness activities.

Parliamentary Representation

2.1 The Senate

When Australia became a Federation in 1901, the Commonwealth Parliament was created. The Commonwealth Parliament consists of the Head of State and two houses: the Senate and the House of Representatives.

All Australian citizens aged 18 years and older vote for people to represent them in both houses of parliament.

The Senate is the upper house of the Commonwealth Parliament.

It consists of 76 senators: 12 representing each of the six states and two each representing the NT and the ACT. Voters in each state and territory elect the people to represent them in the Senate.

In 1901, there were six senators elected from each state, giving a total of 36. There have been three increases to the size of the Senate since Federation. Legislation passed in 1948 increased the number of senators from 36 to 60 (10 per state). In 1974, the number of senators was increased from 60 to 64, when the ACT and the NT each gained two senators. In 1983, the number of senators increased from 64 to 76 (12 per state and two per territory). Changes took effect at the elections that followed.

Senators for each state are elected for six-year terms on a rotating basis, with half the senators retiring every three years (or facing a half-Senate election).

However, where both houses of parliament are dissolved, as in a double dissolution, all senate seats are vacated and contested at the subsequent election. When the new Senate convenes after the election, it will determine which senators will have shorter terms to re-establish the half-Senate rotation.

The terms of senators representing the ACT and the NT commence on the day of their election and expire the day before the next federal election. The election of territory senators is held at the same time as the election of members for the House of Representatives.

2.2 The House of Representatives

The House of Representatives is the lower house or 'people's house' of the Commonwealth Parliament.

Each member of the House of Representatives is elected to represent an area known as an electoral division or electorate.

For the 2019 federal election, Australia was divided into 151 electoral divisions.

State/territory	Divisions
NSW	47
VIC	38
QLD	30
WA	16
SA	10
TAS	5
ACT	3
NT	2
Total	151

Each electoral division within a state or territory contains about the same number of people on the electoral roll. Voters in each electoral division elect one person to represent them in the House of Representatives.

Determining the number of members

The number of members elected to the House of Representatives for each state is proportional to the number of people in that state.

Australia's Constitution provides the original states are to have a minimum of five members. The Electoral Act provides that at least one member is to be chosen in the ACT and the NT, and sets out a formula for determining the representation entitlements of the territories.

Forming government

The political party or coalition of parties which gains the support of a majority in the House of Representatives forms the government. The Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are usually members of the House of Representatives.

Terms of members

The maximum term of the House of Representatives is three years, taken from the date on which the elected house first meets.

However, the Governor-General has the power to dissolve the House of Representatives and call an election before the end of the three year period.

2.3 Representation in the territories

The NT and the ACT have not always been represented in the Commonwealth Parliament.

The NT gained one member in the House of Representatives with limited voting rights in 1922. Full voting rights were not acquired until 1968. The NT is currently represented by two members in the House of Representatives.

The ACT gained one member with limited voting rights in 1948. Full voting rights were acquired in 1966. The ACT is currently represented by three members in the House of Representatives.

In the Senate, the territories were not represented until the 1975 election. Legislation was passed in 1974 allowing the territories two senators each.

More detailed information on parliamentary representation can be found in s 7 and s 24 of the Constitution and in ss 40–54 of the Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918.

2.4 Electoral divisions – drawing the boundaries

For the House of Representatives, each state and territory is divided into electoral divisions. Population determines the number of divisions. To ensure continued equal representation, the boundaries of these divisions have to be redrawn (redistributed) periodically. The location of electors in a state or territory determines where the boundaries of electoral divisions are.

In deciding where the boundaries should be drawn, various factors are taken into consideration such as numerical quotas, means of communication, and community interests.

Timing of redistributions

A redistribution is required when:

- the number of members of the House of Representatives to which a state or territory is entitled has changed due to population changes
- the number of electors in more than one third of the divisions in a state, or one of the divisions in the ACT or the NT, deviates from the average divisional enrolment in the state or territory by over 10 per cent for a period of more than two consecutive months¹
- a period of seven years has elapsed since the previous redistribution.

The redistribution process

After the formal commencement of the redistribution, the current enrolment quota must be struck. The Electoral Commissioner determines the quota by dividing the number of electors enrolled in the state or territory by the number of members of the House of Representatives to be elected in that state or territory at the next federal election.

The three-person Electoral Commission appoints a Redistribution Committee for the state or territory. This committee consists of the Electoral Commissioner and the Australian Electoral Officer (AEO) for the state/territory (except for the ACT where the senior Divisional Returning Officer for the territory is a member), the Surveyor-General and the Auditor-General for that state/territory.

The Electoral Commissioner invites interested people or organisations to submit suggestions about the redistribution within 4.5 weeks.

The suggestions are made available for public inspection. There is then a period of two weeks in which written comments on the suggestions may be lodged.

¹ Since the incorporation of the redistribution process into the Electoral Act in 1984, no redistribution has been necessary due to this particular trigger.

The Redistribution Committee makes a proposed redistribution, taking into consideration a number of factors detailed in the Electoral Act and the public suggestions and comments. Maps showing proposed boundaries and names of divisions, together with the reasons for the proposed redistribution, are published and publicly exhibited.

Following the notification of the initial proposed redistribution, there is a period of four weeks within which objections to the proposed redistribution may be lodged.

This is followed by a period of two weeks in which written comments on the objections can be submitted.

The augmented Electoral Commission for the state or territory considers objections to the proposed redistribution. The augmented Electoral Commission comprises the three members of the Electoral Commission, the AEO for the state/territory (except for the ACT where the senior Divisional Returning Officer for the territory is a member) and the two state/territory representatives on the Redistribution Committee.

The augmented Electoral Commission has 60 days after the closing date for receipt of comments on initial objections to finish its considerations. After considering these objections, the augmented Electoral Commission publicly announces a proposed redistribution.

If the augmented Electoral Commission's proposed redistribution is significantly different from the proposal made by the Redistribution Committee, the augmented Electoral Commission invites further objections.

Having considered any further objections (if required) the augmented Electoral Commission will make a final determination of boundaries and names of the electoral divisions in the particular state or territory. The final report is forwarded to the responsible Minister, and then tabled in both houses.

Population quota

The number of members of the House of Representatives to which a state or territory is entitled is determined by the population quota.

Twelve months after the first meeting of the newly elected House of Representatives, the Electoral Commissioner is required to ascertain the population of the Commonwealth (excluding the territories) according to the latest official statistics published by the Australian Statistician. These figures are then used to determine the population quota and, in turn, how many members of the House of Representatives (electoral divisions) each state is entitled to. A similar exercise is used to calculate the entitlements of the territories.

The population quota is calculated by dividing the population of the six states by the number of senators for the states multiplied by two.

The number of House of Representatives members a state or territory is entitled to is equal to the population of the state or territory divided by the quota rounded to the nearest whole number. If the remainder is less than or equal to 0.5, the figure is rounded down.

Formulas for determination of representation entitlements

POPULATION QUOTA

$$\frac{\text{Total population of the six states}}{\text{Number of senators for the states} \times 2} = \text{Population quota}$$

NUMBER OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MEMBERS PER STATE OR TERRITORY

$$\frac{\text{Total population of individual state or territory}}{\text{Population quota}} = \text{Number of members}$$

Examples of determination of representation entitlements

The determination of representation entitlements on 31 August 2017 (as used for the 2019 federal election) was:

POPULATION QUOTA

$$\frac{23,729,561}{72 \times 2} = 164,788.61806$$

NUMBER OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MEMBERS FOR SOUTH AUSTRALIA

$$\frac{1,716,966}{164,788.61806} = 10.41920 \text{ (rounded down to 10)}$$

Representation entitlement data for all states and territories

NT ³	247,512	164,788.61806	1.50200	2
Total number of members of the House of Representatives				151

² Under sub-section 4(1) of the Electoral Act the Jervis Bay Territory is taken to be part of the ACT. Under sub-section 42(2BA) of the Electoral Act, Norfolk Island is taken for the purposes of this determination to be part of the ACT because it lacks sufficient population to qualify for representation in its own right.

³ Under sub-section 48(2C) of the Electoral Act, the territories of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands and Christmas Island are taken for the purposes of this determination to be part of the Northern Territory because they lack sufficient population to qualify for representation in their own right.

Enrolment quotas

Two enrolment quotas are calculated during the redistribution process:

- the current enrolment quota or average divisional enrolment
- the projected enrolment quota or average divisional enrolment at the projection time, which is usually three and a half years after the expected completion of the redistribution.

The current enrolment quota is determined as soon as practicable after the redistribution commences. It is calculated by dividing the number of people enrolled in the state/territory on the day the redistribution commenced by the number of members to which the state/territory is entitled. The number of electors in each proposed division must not vary by 10 per cent more or less than the current enrolment quota.

The projected enrolment quota is calculated by dividing the projected number of people enrolled in the state/territory at the projection time by the number of members to which the state/territory is entitled. As far as practicable, the number of electors in each division at the projection time should not vary by 3.5 per cent more or less than the projected enrolment quota.

Formulas for calculating enrolment quotas

CURRENT ENROLMENT QUOTA

Number of electors enrolled in a state/territory as at the end of the day on which the redistribution commenced

$$\frac{\text{Number of electors enrolled in a state/territory as at the end of the day on which the redistribution commenced}}{\text{Number of members of the House of Representatives to which the state/territory is entitled}} = \text{Current enrolment quota}$$

PROJECTED ENROLMENT QUOTA

Projected number of electors enrolled in a state/territory as at projection time

$$\frac{\text{Projected number of electors enrolled in a state/territory as at projection time}}{\text{Number of members of the House of Representatives to which the state/territory is entitled}} = \text{Projected enrolment quota}$$

Example of calculation of enrolment quotas

CURRENT ENROLMENT QUOTA

The current enrolment quota for South Australia at 4 September 2017 (the commencement date of the redistribution process) was:

$$\frac{1,195,031}{10} = 119,503$$

The number of electors in each division could vary by up to 10 per cent from 119,503. Therefore the permissible maximum would be 131,453 and the permissible minimum would be 107,553.

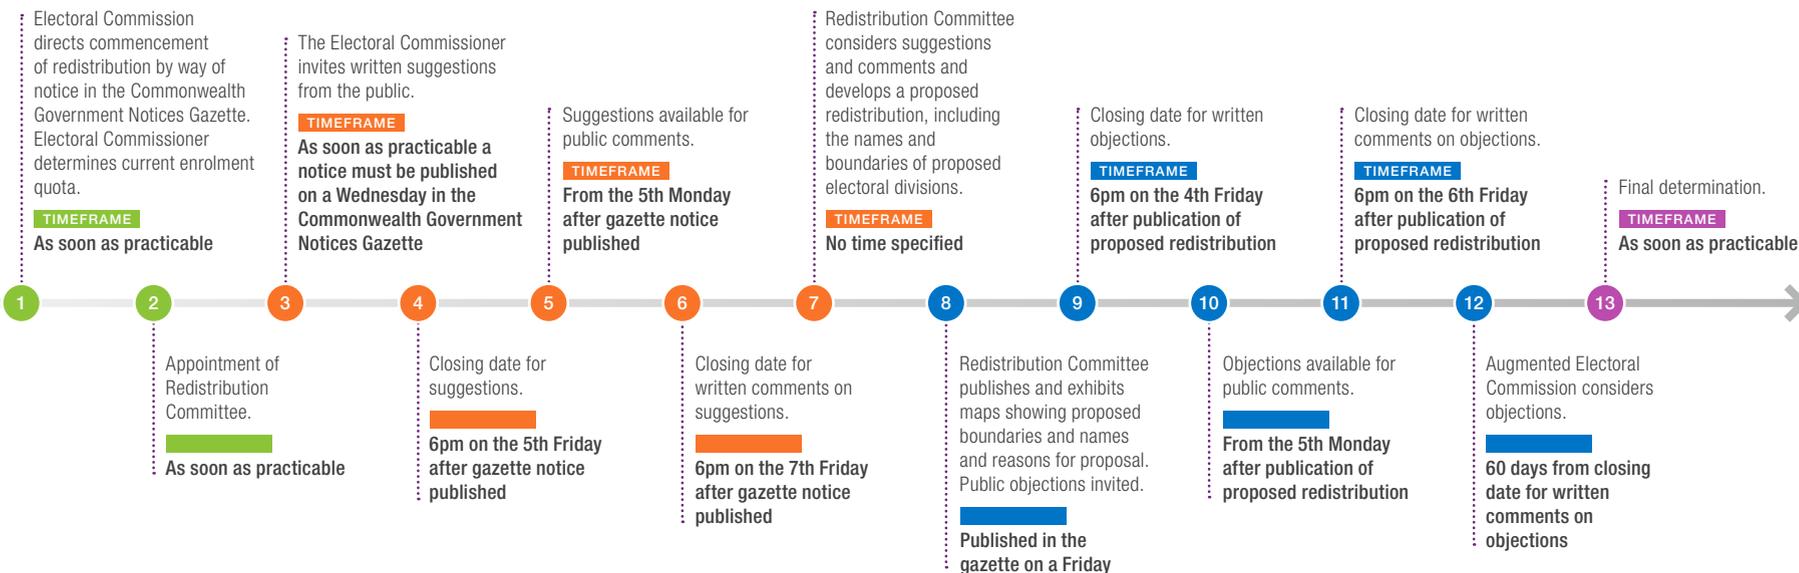

PROJECTED ENROLMENT QUOTA

The projected enrolment quota for South Australia at 20 January 2022 (the projection time) was:

$$\frac{1,227,310}{10} = 122,731$$

The number of electors in each division could vary by up to 3.5 per cent from 122,731. Therefore the permissible maximum would be 127,026 and the permissible minimum would be 118,436.

Redistribution timeline

Redistributions completed since the 2016 election

Redistributions of federal electoral divisions in six states and territories were finished in the period between the 2016 and 2019 elections.

The Northern Territory, Tasmanian and Queensland redistributions were required due to the elapse of seven years since the previous redistribution had been completed.

- the boundaries of the two electoral divisions in the Northern Territory were altered
- the boundaries of all five electoral divisions in Tasmania were altered. The Division of Denison was renamed 'Clark'
- the boundaries of 18 of Queensland's 30 electoral divisions were changed.

On 31 August 2017 the Electoral Commissioner determined the number of members of the House of Representatives increased in Victoria from 37 to 38 and in ACT from two to three. South Australia, however, decreased from 11 to 10.

In addition, the boundaries of all electoral divisions in these three states and territories changed.

- the new Division of Fraser was created in Victoria and four electoral divisions were re-named:
 - the Division of Batman was renamed 'Cooper'
 - the Division of Melbourne Ports was renamed 'Macnamara'
 - the Division of McMillan was renamed 'Monash'
 - the Division of Murray was renamed 'Nicholls'
- the Division of Bean was created in the ACT
- the Division of Port Adelaide was retired in South Australia and the Division of Wakefield was re-named 'Spence'.

Senators for the states serve terms of six years (Chapter 1 s 7 Constitution) that are staggered so half of the 72 senators' terms expire every three years. However, where both houses of parliament are dissolved, as in a double dissolution, all senate seats are vacated and contested at the subsequent election. When the new Senate convenes after the election, it will determine which senators will have shorter terms to re-establish the half-Senate rotation.

The terms of senators representing the ACT and the NT commence on the day of their election and expire at the close of the day immediately before polling day for the next general election. The election of these senators is held at the same time as every general election for the House of Representatives.

Petitions to the Court of Disputed Returns must be filed with the Registry of the High Court within 40 days after the return of the writ. For elections held on the same day, the closing date for petitions to the court is 40 days after the date on which the last writ for those elections is returned. Accordingly, when more than one election is held on the same day, the closing date for petitions to the court is the same.

3.2 Electoral enrolment

The electoral roll

The Commonwealth Electoral Roll is the list of the names and addresses of all people who have enrolled to vote at Australian elections. You must be enrolled to be eligible to vote.

Eligibility for enrolment

Enrolment and voting are compulsory for all Australian citizens who are 18 years of age or older. To enrol for the first time, eligible electors may complete an electoral enrolment form. This can be done online providing evidence of identity, such as a driver's licence, Australian passport number or an enrolled elector to confirm identity. It is also important that eligible electors update their enrolment details each time they move address or change their name. Electors only need to complete one form to enrol to vote in federal, state or territory elections and local government elections. Please see the AEC website for all the ways that you can enrol to vote.

People who are 16 or 17 years old can enrol so they are ready to vote when they turn 18.

British subjects who were on the Commonwealth Electoral Roll immediately before 26 January 1984 are eligible to vote in federal elections.

The following people are not entitled to enrol and vote:

- people who, by reason of being of unsound mind, are incapable of understanding the nature and significance of enrolment and voting
- prisoners serving a sentence of three years or longer may enrol but cannot vote
- people who have been convicted of treason or treachery and have not been pardoned.

Close of rolls figures for federal elections 2010–19

Close of rolls figures are finalised following the processing of all enrolment forms received by the date and time specified in the writ as the close of rolls.

Special enrolment arrangements

Some people, because of their circumstances or needs have different arrangements for enrolment. These arrangements include:

- people who are unable to complete and sign their own enrolment form due to a physical disability may have someone help them complete their form and may also apply to become general postal voters
- people with no fixed address or who are homeless, may apply for itinerant enrolment
- people working in Antarctica can register as Antarctic electors to maintain their name on the roll and to make use of special voting arrangements at election time
- people who believe that the publication of their address on the roll would put their own, or their family's safety at risk may apply for silent enrolment so that their address is not shown on the roll
- prisoners serving a full-time sentence of less than three years can vote in federal elections. Prisoners serving a sentence of three years or longer are not eligible to vote until released from prison. All prisoners may enrol or remain enrolled
- members of the House of Representatives can choose to enrol in the electoral division that they represent and senators can enrol in any division in the state or territory they represent

- people who are currently enrolled and are going overseas or are already overseas, and intend to return to Australia within six years, may apply to register as an eligible overseas elector
- Australian citizens who are not currently enrolled and are living and working overseas, and would have been eligible to enrol if they were in Australia, are able to enrol using the enrolment from outside Australia form on the AEC website.

General postal voters

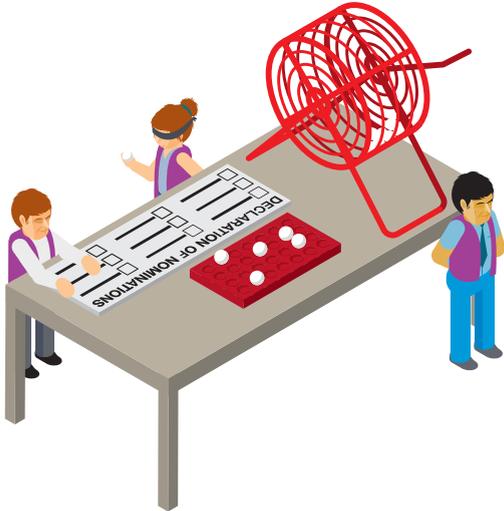

People who cannot attend a polling place due to ongoing personal circumstances, may apply to be registered as a general postal voter. If approved postal voting material will be automatically sent to the elector for each federal election. These eligibility requirements are set out in s 184A of the Electoral Act.

Note that different conditions may apply for registration as a postal voter under state and territory electoral laws.

Further information is available on the AEC website.

3.3 Candidates and nominations

Candidates must be nominated before they can be elected to the Senate or the House of Representatives. The qualifications for nomination to both houses are the same.

A candidate must be at least 18 years old, an Australian citizen and entitled to vote or be qualified to enrol.

Section 44 of the Constitution disqualifies certain people from being elected to the parliament. This is a complex area that has been the subject of various legal challenges. Further information is available in the Electoral Backgrounder: Constitutional disqualifications and intending candidates on the AEC website.

A qualification checklist relating to section 44 of the Australian Constitution (the checklist) forms part of the candidate nomination. Intending candidates must complete the checklist and provide documents as required, to help demonstrate their eligibility to be elected to Parliament.

A candidate for the House of Representatives lodges their nomination with the Divisional Returning Officer for the division in which they are standing. However, a registered political party may make a bulk nomination of all endorsed House of Representatives candidates within a particular state or territory. This must be lodged with the Australian Electoral Officer (AEO) for that state or territory at least 48 hours before the close of nominations.

Senate candidates lodge their nominations with the AEO for the state or territory in which they are standing.

It is not possible to nominate until the writ for the election has been issued. Nominations must be made in the appropriate form and must be received by noon on the closing date for nominations (except for bulk nominations). Nominations cannot be withdrawn after the close of nominations.

Senate and House of Representatives candidates are required to pay a $2,000 deposit with their nomination.

The deposit will be refunded in a House of Representatives election if the candidate's total number of first preference votes is at least four per cent of the formal first preference votes for that division. The deposit will be refunded in a Senate election if the candidate's total number of first preference votes is at least four per cent of the formal first preference votes for that state or territory. The deposit is also refunded if the candidate is elected.

Where a candidate's name is included in a Senate group, their deposit will be refunded if they are elected, or the sum of the first preference votes received by all candidates in the group is at least four per cent of the formal first preference vote for that state or territory.

Nationally, 1,514 people nominated as candidates in the 2019 federal election.

The 2019 figure included 1,056 candidates for the House of Representatives and 458 candidates for the Senate. There were 994 male candidates, 519 female candidates and one candidate that identified their gender as 'other'.

3.4 Voter turnout

Voter turnout is the percentage of enrolled and eligible electors who voted in the election, excluding rejected declaration votes.

For the 2019 federal election, turnout was 91.89 per cent for the House of Representatives and 92.48 per cent for the Senate.

3.5 Voting

Voting is compulsory at federal elections and referendums.

In order to facilitate voting, there are multiple channels available.

Types of votes

Australians can vote by:

Ordinary vote – a vote cast on election day at a polling place within the electoral division for which a voter is enrolled. The majority of voters cast an ordinary vote.

Absent vote – a vote cast at a polling place outside a voter's electoral division on election day, but still within their state or territory.

Pre-poll vote – a vote cast at an early voting centre or an AEC divisional office before election day. House of Representatives pre-poll votes made within a voter's electoral division (pre-poll ordinary votes) are counted on election night. Votes made outside a voter's electoral division including overseas voting (pre-poll declaration votes) are counted during the declaration vote counts after election night.

Postal vote – a vote cast by post because the voter cannot attend a polling place on election day.

Provisional vote – a vote cast when a voter's name cannot be found on the certified list, or the voter's name is already marked off the certified list as having voted, or the voter is registered as a silent voter or someone with no fixed address. Provisional votes are not entered into the count until a check of entitlement has been completed.

When a voter casts an absent, pre-poll declaration, postal or provisional vote, they complete a declaration giving their personal details. Divisional staff check the voter's entitlement before these votes are counted.

Voter services at the 2019 federal election

Blind and low vision voters

Voters who are blind or have low vision were able to cast a pre-poll ordinary vote over the telephone from any location.

The telephone voting service involved a two-step process of registration and voting. This service allowed people to cast their vote in secret and with a degree of independence.

Registrations opened on 26 April and were available until 12pm on 18 May. Voting via this service commenced on 29 April and was available until 6pm on 18 May.

During this period 2,214 people registered and 2,044 people used the service to cast their vote. This compares to 2,175 registrations and 1,998 votes cast using this service at the 2016 federal election.

Overseas voters

Voters who were travelling, working or living overseas could vote at one of 85 Australian overseas voting centres, or could apply for a postal vote. Pre-poll voting was available for up to two weeks prior to election day. There were 60,710 votes cast at Australian overseas voting centres including 12,952 in London, 5,428 in Hong Kong and 3,325 in New York City.

Mobile polling

Voters in many hospitals, nursing homes, some prisons, and remote areas were visited by a mobile polling team.

The AEC created 557 mobile polling teams which visited over 3,000 locations by road, air and sea. They visited Indigenous communities, remote outstations, pastoral properties, small towns, tourist resorts, hospitals, nursing homes and mining camps across Australia.

Postal voting

Voters could apply for a postal vote on the AEC website or by using a paper form. Once candidates have been declared, voters were sent ballot papers and were required to complete them before the close of polling. For the 2019 federal election, 1,538,139 postal vote applications were processed, and of these, 1,291,564 postal votes were returned.

How to vote

Voters received separate ballot papers for the House of Representatives (coloured green) and the Senate (coloured white). Completed papers were lodged in separate ballot boxes.

House of Representatives

Candidates for the House of Representatives are elected using the preferential voting system. This system has been used in federal elections since 1918. Candidates stand for election in a particular electoral division. To be elected, a candidate must receive more than half the formal votes cast for that division.

For the House of Representatives ballot paper, voters put a '1' in the box beside the candidate who is their first choice, '2' in the box beside their second choice and so on, until they have numbered every box. If any candidate gains more than 50 per cent of the formal first preference votes (an absolute majority), they are elected. If no candidate has an absolute majority, the voter's other preferences are taken into consideration. The distribution of preferences takes place in every division, even where a candidate already has a majority of first preference votes.

Members are elected for a maximum three-year term.

Senate

Following the passage of amendments to the Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918 passed by the parliament in March 2016, changes have been made to the voting method for electing senators.

Candidates for the Senate are elected using a preferential voting system. Candidates stand for election in a state or territory. To be elected, a candidate must receive a certain proportion of the votes, known as a quota.

The Senate ballot paper has two sections. An elector can either vote above-the-line or below-the-line, but not both. However, if the elector completes both sections formally, the below-the-line section takes precedence.

Above-the-line

Voters choosing to vote above-the-line are instructed to complete at least six boxes with numbers from 1 to 6. By voting above the line, preferences will be distributed to the candidates in the party or group that was the first choice, then to candidates in the party or group that was the second choice and so on, until all the preferences have been distributed.

Below-the-line

Voters choosing to vote below-the-line are instructed to complete at least 12 boxes with numbers from 1 to 12. By voting below the line, preferences will be distributed to the individual candidates as numbered on the ballot paper in the order of the voter's choice.

It is a Constitutional requirement that each original state be equally represented regardless of its population. There are a total of 76 senators: 12 for each state and two for each territory. Senators for each state are elected for six-year terms on a rotating basis with half of the senators retiring every three years (or facing a half-Senate election).

The terms of senators representing the ACT and the NT commence on the day of their election and expire at the close of the day immediately before the polling day for the next federal election. The election of these senators is held at the same time as every House of Representatives election.

Forty Senate vacancies are contested at a half-Senate election when it is held simultaneously with a House of Representatives election. At a double dissolution all 76 Senate positions are contested.

The method of counting Senate votes is different to the House of Representatives.

See Section 3.7

3.6 Informal voting

A vote is regarded as informal if the ballot paper has not been completed properly. Informal ballot papers are not counted towards any candidate but are set aside.

According to s 268 of the Electoral Act, a vote is informal if:

- the ballot paper is not marked at all
- the ballot paper does not have the official mark and has not been initialled by the polling official, and the ballot paper is not authentic in the opinion of the Divisional Returning Officer
- the ballot paper has writing on it which identifies the voter
- in the case of an absent vote, the ballot paper is not contained in the declaration envelope
- the voter has not completed a full preferential vote.

The Electoral Act includes provisions that in some cases allow ballot papers to be counted as formal, while not technically meeting the above criteria.

3.7 Counting the votes

Counting the votes on election night

The counting of votes is known as the scrutiny and it is usually observed by scrutineers nominated by the candidates. The scrutiny commences on election day in each polling place after 6pm (once polling has closed). Ordinary ballot papers are counted on election night.

When a House of Representatives election and a Senate election are held in conjunction, the House of Representatives ballot papers are counted before the Senate ballot papers. If a referendum is held in conjunction with an election, the referendum ballot papers are counted after those of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Polling officials are required to complete four main counting tasks after polling has closed. They are required to:

- count the first preferences on the House of Representatives ballot papers
- conduct a two-candidate preferred (TCP) count of the House of Representatives ballot papers
- count the first preferences on the Senate ballot papers.

The first preference results for House of Representatives ballot papers are phoned through to the relevant Divisional Returning Officer (DRO), along with the number of informal votes. The DRO enters the results for each polling place in that division into the AEC's election management system. These results are electronically fed to the media and the tally room on the AEC website.

Polling officials then conduct an indicative distribution of preferences (a TCP count for the House of Representatives) between the two previously identified leading candidates, to give an indication of the likely outcome of the poll in that division.

Next, the first preference votes on the Senate ballot papers — above and below-the-line — are counted, phoned through to the DRO and entered into the election management system.

Declaration envelopes contain absent votes, some pre-poll votes, postal votes or provisional votes. Postal vote envelopes are checked. They can be checked from receipt date. Other envelopes need to go through the Declaration Exchange before being checked and opened. These votes, still sealed in their envelopes, are transferred from the polling place to the division in which the voter is enrolled. The voter's details on the declaration envelopes are then checked before the envelopes can be opened and the votes inside counted. These can be checked from the Monday prior to election day but they cannot be opened for counting purposes until after election day.

Counting the votes for the House of Representatives

A House of Representatives candidate is elected if they gain more than 50 per cent of the formal vote.

First, all of the number '1' votes are counted for each candidate. If a candidate gets more than half the total first preference votes, that candidate will be elected.

If no candidate has more than half of the votes, the candidate with the fewest votes is excluded. This candidate's votes are transferred to the other candidates according to the second preferences of voters on the ballot papers for the excluded candidate. If still no candidate has more than half the votes, the candidate who now has the fewest votes is excluded and the votes are transferred according to the next preference shown. This process continues until one candidate has more than half the total number of formal votes and is elected.

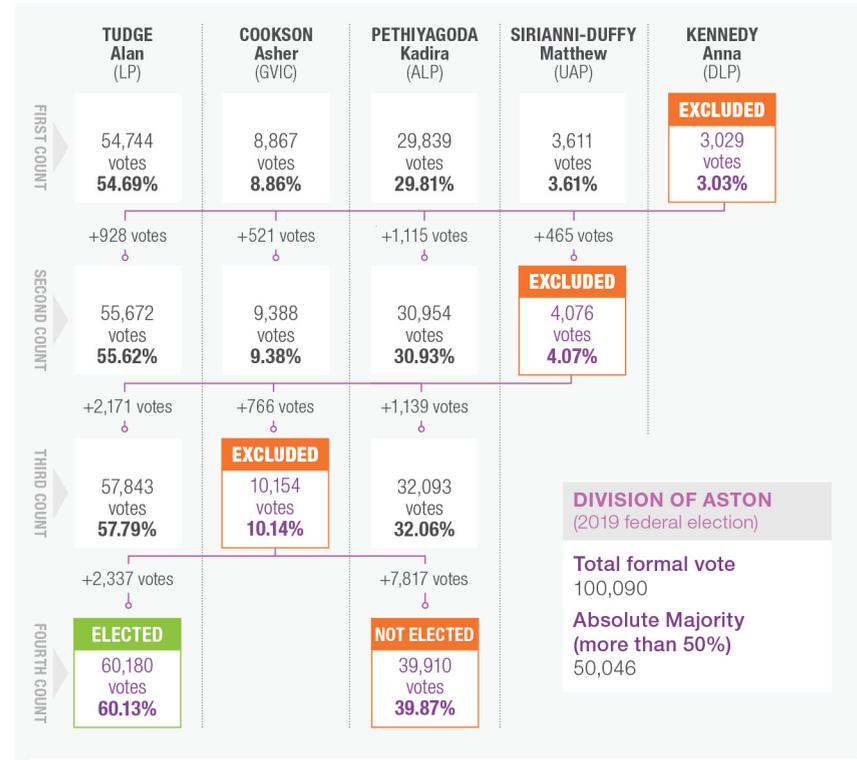

Note: To calculate the absolute majority, you first calculate 50 per cent of the total number of formal votes, round down to the nearest whole number, if required, and add 1.

A distribution of preferences takes place in every division, even where a candidate already has an absolute majority of first preference votes.

The result of this full distribution of preferences is used to calculate the two-party preferred (TPP) statistics for divisions that have the Australian Labor Party and Coalition representatives as the final two candidates.

In divisions that do not have the Australian Labor Party and Coalition representatives as the final two candidates, a scrutiny for information is conducted to determine the TPP result. A scrutiny for information, in such cases, is a notional distribution of preferences to find the result of preference flows to the Australian Labor Party and Coalition candidates.

Example of a distribution of preferences

Counting the votes for the Senate

The Senate count is more complicated than the count for the House of Representatives. Counting of first preferences begins on election night but the full count cannot be completed until several weeks after the election.

Working out the quota

To be elected to the Senate, a candidate needs to gain a quota of the formal votes. The quota is calculated by dividing the total number of formal ballot papers by the number of senators to be elected plus one, and then adding one to the result (ignoring any remainder).

FORMULA FOR DETERMINING A SENATE QUOTA

$$\frac{\text{Number of formal ballot papers}}{\text{Number of senators to be elected} + 1} + 1 = \text{Senate quota}$$

In this half senate election example, the formal votes total 69,993.

There are 6 senate vacancies.

EXAMPLE OF DETERMINING A SENATE QUOTA

This is how the quota is calculated

$$\frac{69,993}{6 + 1} + 1 = 10,000$$

Therefore the quota, or number of votes required to be elected, in this half senate election example is 10,000.

Counting the first preference votes

Ballot papers are sorted according to which candidate or group has received the number '1' preference on each ballot paper. Candidates who receive the quota, or more, of first preference votes are elected immediately.

As a general rule, when a candidate is elected with a surplus of votes, that surplus is transferred before any exclusion is undertaken.

Transferring the surplus

Any surplus votes from elected candidates (votes in excess of the quota they need) are transferred to the candidates who were the second choice of voters. Because it is not possible to determine which votes actually elected the candidate and which votes are surplus, all the elected candidate's ballot papers are transferred at a reduced rate.

As surplus votes are transferred, other candidates may be elected. However, if all surplus votes from elected candidates are transferred and there are still unfilled positions, further counting is undertaken as explained below.

FORMULA FOR CALCULATING THE TRANSFER VALUE

$$\frac{\text{Surplus}}{\text{Number of votes for candidate}} = \text{Transfer value}$$

EXAMPLE OF TRANSFERRING THE SURPLUS

Candidate A gains 1,000,000 votes. If the required quota was 600,000 the surplus would be 400,000.

The transfer value for candidate A's votes would be:

$$\frac{400,000}{1,000,000} = 0.4$$

Candidate A's ballot papers (1,000,000) are then re-examined in order to determine the number of votes for second choice candidates.

If candidate A's ballot papers gave 900,000 second preferences to candidate B, then candidate B would receive 360,000 votes (900,000 multiplied by the transfer value). These votes would be added to the votes candidate B received in the first count.

If candidate B has reached the quota, they are elected. If candidate B has any surplus votes a transfer value would be calculated and votes would be transferred in the same way.

Exclusion of unsuccessful candidates

Starting with the candidate who has the lowest number of votes, unsuccessful candidates are excluded from the count. Their ballot papers are distributed to the remaining candidates based on preferences. If any of the remaining candidates obtain a quota through this process of distribution, they are elected. Their surplus (if any) is transferred before any other candidates are excluded. The above process continues until all Senate positions are filled.

Recounts

A recount may be undertaken, approved, or directed at any time before the result of an election is declared. It should not be confused with the routine recheck (fresh and further scrutines) of House of Representatives or Senate ballot papers during the days following an election.

For a House of Representatives election, when the margin of votes between the first and second-ranked candidates at the completion of the distribution of preferences is less than 100, a recount is automatically triggered. A full recount of all formal and informal ballot papers is then undertaken. This involves a full fresh scrutiny and a two-candidate preferred distribution, followed by a full distribution of preferences. Candidates will be advised that a recount is being undertaken and of the arrangements for the recount.

For a Senate election, there is no automatic trigger for a recount. However, a Senate candidate can appeal for a recount if all of the following three conditions exist:

- the margin of votes between the two lowest ranked candidates is small, relative to the number of votes involved in the exclusion
- the number of votes involved in the exclusion is large, relative to the margin of votes between the two lowest ranked candidates
- the candidate requesting the recount is able to demonstrate that the exclusion of a different candidate at that exclusion point would have led to a different election outcome.

Legal challenges

A candidate, voter or the AEC may dispute the validity of an election or return by addressing a petition to the High Court, sitting as the Court of Disputed Returns. The petition must be filed within 40 days of the date the writ is returned or – if there is more than one election held on the same day – within 40 days of the date the last of the writs for all of the elections held on the same day is returned.

The legislative requirements for such petitions are set out in Part XXII of the Electoral Act.

There were three petitions lodged in the High Court sitting as the Court of Disputed Returns in relation to the 2019 federal election. Two of the petitions that were brought alleged a breach of sub-s 329(1) of the Electoral Act as a result of electoral advertising in the divisions of Chisholm and Kooyong, where posters written in the Mandarin language were placed in close proximity to AEC signage in a similar purple colour to that used by the AEC. These two petitions were heard together in the Federal Court sitting as the Court of Disputed Returns and were dismissed.

The third petition related to the eligibility of the elected candidate in the division of Kooyong alleged that, under the Constitution, the elected candidate was not eligible to sit as a member of the House of Representatives because he was the citizen of another country. This petition was also dismissed by the Federal Court sitting as the Court of Disputed Returns.

The Electoral Act, still remains the authoritative and guiding policy for candidates to challenge in the Court of Disputed Returns for alleged breaches of the Electoral Act.

3.8 Election funding and financial disclosure

The funding and disclosure provisions of the Electoral Act commenced in 1984. The current provisions are comprised of two main components:

- public funding of election campaigns
- disclosure of certain financial details by candidates, registered political parties and other persons and groups. Returns are submitted to the AEC and published on the AEC website.

Election funding

A candidate or Senate group is eligible for election funding if they receive at least four per cent of the first preference vote in the division or the state or territory they contested. The amount to be paid is calculated by multiplying the number of votes received by the current election funding rate. The funding rate for the 2019 federal election was 275.642 cents per House of Representatives and Senate vote. This rate is indexed every six months to increases in the Consumer Price Index.

Payment procedures

Candidates who receive at least four percent of the first preference vote in an election will receive an automatic payment without having to submit an election funding claim or demonstrate electoral expenditure. The automatic payment amount for the 2019 federal election was $10,080.

In order to receive election funding of greater than the automatic payment a claim setting out electoral expenditure incurred must be lodged with the AEC by the agent of the eligible political party, candidate, or Senate group.

Payment of election funding is limited to the lesser of:

- the calculated election funding entitlement; or
- the amount of demonstrated electoral expenditure.

Election financial disclosures

Following an election, key participants in the electoral process are required to lodge with the AEC various returns disclosing certain election campaign transactions. The disclosure threshold for the 2019 federal election was $13,800.

Summary of election returns for the 2019 federal election

Candidates

Type of return	Timeframe	Due date
Donations received, electoral expenditure and discretionary benefits	Within 15 weeks after election day	By 2 Sept 2019

Senate groups

Type of return	Timeframe	Due date
Donations received, electoral expenditure and discretionary benefits	Within 15 weeks after election day	By 2 Sept 2019

Donors

Type of return	Timeframe	Due date
Donations received and donations made to candidates or a member of a Senate group	Within 15 weeks after election day	By 2 Sept 2019

All returns are available for public inspection 24 weeks after election day. For the 2019 federal election, returns were available for public inspection from Monday 4 November 2019.

The AEC is required under s 17(2) of the Electoral Act to prepare a separate report for the Minister on the operations of the funding and disclosure provisions in relation to each federal election. Once tabled in parliament, these reports are available on the AEC website.

Annual financial disclosures

All registered political parties and each state or territory branch of a registered political party must submit an annual return to the AEC within 16 weeks of the close of the financial year. The return must disclose total receipts, gifts-in-kind, details of receipts greater than the disclosure threshold, total payments, total debts, details of debts greater than the disclosure threshold and details of discretionary benefits.

All registered political campaigners must submit an annual return to the AEC within 16 weeks of the close of the financial year. The return must disclose total receipts, gifts-in-kind, details of receipts greater than the disclosure threshold, total payments, total debts, details of debts greater than the disclosure threshold, total electoral expenditure and details of discretionary benefits.

All registered associated entities must submit an annual return to the AEC within 16 weeks of the close of the financial year. The return must disclose total receipts, gifts-in-kind, details of receipts greater than the disclosure threshold, total payments, total debts, details of debts greater than the disclosure threshold, details of discretionary benefits and may additionally be required to disclose sources of capital deposits.

Persons or organisations that donated more than the threshold to a political party or political campaigner in the course of a financial year must submit an annual return to the AEC within 20 weeks of the close of the financial year detailing each donation.

Additionally, persons or organisations incurring more than the threshold of electoral expenditure are required to lodge an annual return within 20 weeks of the end of the financial year. These returns disclose totals of electoral expenditure incurred, as well as donations received.

Recent thresholds for financial disclosure are:

- 2017–18: $13,500
- 2016–17: $13,200
- 2015–16: $13,000
- 2014–15: $12,800.

Registered political parties

Parties that register may have their party names printed on the ballot papers next to their candidates and must also fulfil legislative requirements under the funding and disclosure provisions of the Electoral Act.

Some parties do not separately register their state and territory branches, but such branches are nevertheless required to lodge annual financial disclosure returns.

For federal elections the Register of Political Parties (the register) is suspended from the day the writ is issued until the day the writ is returned. For the 2019 federal election, the register was suspended on 11 April 2019. There were 82 political parties registered for the 2019 federal election.

4.3 By-elections and supplementary elections

By-elections

Whenever a vacancy occurs in the House of Representatives because of the death, resignation, absence without leave, expulsion, disqualification or ineligibility of a member, a writ may be issued by the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the election of a new member. A writ may also be issued when the Court of Disputed Returns declares an election of a member of the House of Representatives to be void.

A by-election may be held on a date to be determined by the Speaker or, in the Speaker's absence from the Commonwealth of Australia, by the Governor-General in Council. The polling must take place on a Saturday.

The Acting Speaker performing the duties of the Speaker during the Speaker's absence within the Commonwealth of Australia may also issue a by-election writ. The Chairman of Committees as Deputy Speaker can also issue a writ but only in the role of Acting Speaker during the Speaker's absence within the Commonwealth of Australia.

There are no constitutional or statutory requirements that writs be issued for by-elections within any prescribed period.

The following cases have occurred:

- with a federal election pending, the speaker has declined to issue a writ in order to avoid the need for two elections within a short period of time
- a writ has been issued and then withdrawn by the speaker when a dissolution of the House of Representatives has intervened.

The guiding principle in fixing the date of a by-election has always been to hold the election as early as possible, so that the electors are not left without representation any longer than is necessary.

Supplementary elections

A supplementary election must be held if a candidate for a House of Representatives election dies in the period between the declaration of nominations and election day. A new writ is issued for another election in that division, but the election is held using the electoral roll prepared for the original election. This provision is found in s 181 of the Electoral Act.

This provision was introduced in its current form in 1925, following the automatic election of Nationalist Party candidate, Grosvenor Francis, in the Division of Kennedy. Charles McDonald represented the Division of Kennedy from 1901–25. Mr Francis was elected after the death of the Labor candidate, Charles McDonald, who died the day before election day in 1925. As only two candidates nominated for the seat, one from the Labor Party and one from the Nationalist Party, the Nationalist member was automatically elected under the law of the day.

The first supplementary election occurred in the Division of Hume in 1972. It was held on the same day as the 1972 federal election so was not classified as a separate election. This can no longer occur because of the minimum 33 day timetable between the issue of the writ and election day.

If a candidate for a Senate election dies in the period between declaration of nominations and election day, and the number of remaining candidates is not greater than the number of candidates to be elected, those candidates are declared elected. However, if the remaining candidates are greater in number than the number of candidates to be elected, the election proceeds. A vote recorded on a Senate ballot paper for the deceased candidate is counted to the candidate who received the voter's next preference.

4.4 Referendums

Referendums

The Australian Constitution can only be amended through a formal vote of the Australian people. Section 128 of the Constitution provides that any proposed law to alter the Constitution must be passed by an absolute majority in both houses of the Commonwealth Parliament. If passed by both houses, it is submitted to a referendum at least two months, but less than six months, after it has been passed by parliament. In certain circumstances, a proposed amendment can be submitted to a referendum if it is passed on two separate occasions by only one house of the parliament.

At the referendum, the proposed alteration must be approved by a double majority. That is:

- a majority of all voters nationally, and
- a majority of voters in a majority of the states (at least four out of six states).

Since Federation, only eight out of 44 proposals to amend the Constitution have been approved.

Voting in referendums is compulsory. Voters have to write either 'yes' or 'no' on the ballot paper opposite each question.

Voters in the ACT and the NT have only been allowed to vote at referendums since 1984 (following the successful 1977 referendum). Their votes only count towards the national total.

Plebiscites

In the Australian context an issue put to a formal vote which does not affect the Constitution is called a plebiscite.

Governments hold plebiscites in order to determine whether the Australian people support or oppose a proposed action on an issue. Unlike a referendum, the government is not bound by the result of a plebiscite, which functions in the same way as an advisory referendum does in some countries.

Three plebiscites have been held: two on the conscription of troops during World War I in 1916 and 1917, and one on the national song in 1977.

The Australian Marriage Law Postal Survey conducted by the Australian Bureau of Statistics in 2017 was not a plebiscite under this definition. Rather than being a vote, the Survey was a statistical exercise measuring the level of support for changing the Marriage Act 1961 to allow same-sex marriage.

4.5 2019 House of Representatives results

Results by electoral division

This section gives an overview of the 2019 federal election results for each division. Candidates are listed in the order they appeared on the ballot paper for each division.

General information is also provided on each division, including origin of name, demographic classification, seat status, area in square kilometres and the number of eligible voters at the 2019 federal election.

Demographic classification of divisions is based on the following criteria:

- Inner metropolitan – situated in capital cities and consisting of well-established, built-up suburbs
- Outer metropolitan – situated in capital cities and containing large areas of recent suburban expansion
- Provincial – outside capital cities but with a majority of enrolment in major provincial cities
- Rural – outside capital cities and without majority of enrolment in major provincial cities.

Seat status is generally based on the two-party preferred results of the 2019 federal election. However, in seats where the Australian Labor Party and the Liberal/National Coalition were not the final two candidates, the seat status is based on the two-candidate preferred result (e.g. marginal independent).

The two-party preferred figure refers to the number of votes received by the Australian Labor Party and Liberal/National Coalition candidates after a full distribution of preferences. The two-candidate preferred figure refers to the number of votes received by the two leading candidates after a full distribution of preferences.

Where an elected candidate receives less than 56 per cent of the vote, the seat is classified as marginal; 56–60 per cent is classified as fairly safe; and more than 60 per cent is considered safe.

The percentage column expresses each candidate's votes as a percentage of total formal first preference votes. Also shown is the number of formal and informal votes as a percentage of the total votes and the number of total votes as a percentage of eligible voters. In some instances the total percentage of formal first preference votes may not equal 100 per cent due to the rounding of individual percentages to two decimal places.

First preference votes by group

The tables in this section show the number of votes cast for political parties and other candidates nationally, and by state or territory.

The enrolment figures in these tables show the number of electors entitled to vote at the 2019 federal election.

The 'Votes' column shows the number of formal first preference votes for that political party.

The percentage column shows each political party's votes as a percentage of the total number of formal first preference votes.

National summary Senate results 2019

The votes attributed to 'Other' in the national summary are for all other political parties, ungrouped candidates and candidates not affiliated with a political party.

Glossary and indices

5.1 Glossary

Term	Definition
Absent vote	A declaration vote cast at a polling place outside a voter's electoral division, but still within their state or territory.
Absolute majority	More than half of the formal votes in an election.
Australian Electoral Commission (AEC)	The Commonwealth agency responsible for providing Australians with an independent electoral service and enhancing their understanding of, and participation in, the electoral process.
Australian Electoral Officer (AEO)	The AEC's manager in each state and territory. The AEO is the returning officer for the Senate election in their state or territory.
Ballot paper	A paper that shows the names of the candidates who are standing for election and on which voters mark their vote.
Bulk Nominations	Where a political party may make a bulk nomination of all endorsed House of Representative candidates within a particular State or Territory.
By-election	An election held to fill a single vacancy in the House of Representatives.
Candidate	A person standing for election to the Senate or the House of Representatives.
Casual vacancy	A vacant seat in the Senate caused by a senator resigning or dying.
Certified list of voters	The official electoral roll used to mark off the names of voters. The list contains the names and addresses of all eligible voters in a division.

Term	Definition
Close seat	A seat where the results are tight. On election night, this is where the two-candidate preferred (TCP) result is between 47 per cent and 53 per cent and more than five per cent of the vote has been counted. After election night and until counting is completed, this is where the TCP result is between 49.5 per cent and 50.5 per cent and more than five per cent of the vote has been counted.
Constitution	The Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act 1900 provides the basic rules for the government of Australia.
Constitutional referendum	A vote by all eligible Australian voters on any proposed changes to the Constitution.
Court of Disputed Returns	The jurisdiction established by the Electoral Act to determine disputes and the validity of elections.
Declaration vote	Any vote that requires the voter to sign a declaration instead of being marked off the certified list.
Division	A geographical area of Australia (known as an electoral division or electorate) represented by a member of parliament elected at a House of Representatives election.
Divisional Returning Officer (DRO)	The AEC officer responsible for conducting the election in each division. The DRO is the returning officer for the House of Representatives election in their division.
Double dissolution	Occurs when both the Senate and the House of Representatives are dissolved by the Governor-General. This is the only situation where all House of Representatives and Senate seats are declared vacant at the same time.

Term	Definition
Electoral Act	The Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918 is the legislation governing the Commonwealth electoral process.
Electoral roll	The list of people entitled to vote in an election or referendum.
Electorate	See 'Division'.
Electoral Commissioner	The officer who performs the functions of the chief executive officer of the AEC.
Exhausted vote	A ballot paper which shows no further valid preference for any candidate and must be set aside from the count.
Fairly safe seat	A seat where the elected candidate received between 56 per cent and 60 per cent of the vote.
Federal election	A vote by all eligible Australians to elect members of parliament to represent them in the House of Representatives and the Senate.
Formal vote	A vote cast in an election or referendum that has been marked according to the rules for that election or referendum and can be counted towards the result.
Franchise	The right to vote.
Fresh scrutiny	The check and recount of ballot papers after election day by AEC staff.
Funding and disclosure	The Commonwealth funding and disclosure scheme established under the Electoral Act to deal with public funding of federal election campaigns and the disclosure of detailed financial information.
General Postal Voter	A voter who is registered to have postal ballot papers sent to them automatically by post.

Term	Definition
House of Representatives	One of the two houses of the Commonwealth Parliament. It is the house in which the Australian Government is formed.
How-to-vote cards	Printed materials offered to voters by party workers at polling places displaying how a party or a candidate would like voters to cast their vote.
Independents	Candidates or members of parliament who do not belong to a registered political party.
Informal vote	A vote cast in an election or referendum that has not been marked according to the rules for that election or referendum and cannot be counted towards the result.
Itinerant elector	A voter with no fixed address.
Marginal seat	A seat where the elected candidate received less than 56 per cent of the vote.
Mobile polling team	A team of polling officials that travels to some hospitals and nursing homes, prisons, remand centres and remote locations to collect votes.
Ordinary vote	A vote usually cast on election day at a polling place within the electoral division for which a voter is enrolled.
Plebiscite	A ballot of all eligible voters that does not affect the Constitution.
Political party	An organisation representing a group of people with similar ideas or aims. Parties registered with the AEC are eligible to have the party affiliation of their endorsed candidates printed on ballot papers. Registered parties can also have logos, approved by the AEC, appear adjacent to their candidate's names on the ballot papers.

Term	Definition
Postal vote	A vote cast by post because the voter cannot attend a polling place in their state or territory.
Preferential voting	A system of voting that requires a voter to indicate their order of preference for each candidate on the ballot paper.
Pre-poll vote	A vote cast at an early voting centre or an AEC divisional office before election day.
Proportional representation	An electoral system used in multi-member electorates. Parties, groups and independent candidates are elected to the parliament in proportion to their support in the electorate.
Provisional vote	A vote cast when a voter's name cannot be found on the certified list, the voter's name is already marked off the certified list as having voted, or the voter is registered as a silent elector.
Quota – enrolment	The current or projected average divisional enrolment figure for a state or territory.
Quota – population	The figure used to determine the number of parliamentary representatives to which a state or territory is entitled.
Quota – Senate	The number of votes a Senate candidate needs to receive to be elected.
Redistribution	The redrawing of electoral boundaries to ensure that there is approximately the same number of electors in each division.
Safe seat	A seat where the elected candidate received more than 60 per cent of the vote.
Scrutineer	A person appointed by a candidate to observe the voting and counting of the votes.

Term	Definition
Scrutiny	The counting of votes which leads to the election result.
Seat	Another term for an electorate or division – used because the candidate elected then has a seat in parliament.
Senate	One of the two houses of the Commonwealth Parliament.
Silent elector	An elector who has applied to have their address not appear on the electoral roll because their safety or that of their family may be at risk.
Surplus	Votes gained by a Senate candidate which are surplus to the quota required for election.
Swing	The difference between a candidate or party's vote at one election in comparison to another.
Tally Room	An AEC website that displays official election results.
Turnout	The number of enrolled electors whose votes were counted in the election.
Two-candidate preferred (TCP) count	An indicative distribution of preferences between the two likely leading candidates for a House of Representatives election.
Two-party preferred (TPP) count	An indicative distribution of preferences between the two major sides of politics in Australia (the Australian Labor Party and the Coalition).
Writ	A document commanding an electoral officer to hold an election. The writ contains dates for the close of rolls, the close of nominations, the election day and the latest day for the return of the writ.
