Foreword

It is my pleasure to introduce the 2010 Election Pocketbook. This book provides a quick reference guide to the last federal election. It contains useful information such as election results at the divisional, state and national level, enrolment figures, data on formal and informal votes, types of votes cast and election funding.

The 2010 federal election was delivered through the hard work and tireless commitment of Australian Electoral Commission (AEC) staff located in our national office, state offices and the divisional office network. During the election our staff administered the logistics of putting in place nearly 70 000 capable polling officials and more than 7 500 polling places that allowed over 13 million people to cast their ballot. This Pocketbook reflects the results of this effort and is a testament to the staff involved throughout the election.

The Pocketbook also contains historical information about Australia's electoral system and processes, an explanation of counting votes and the nomination process as well as information about redistributions and referendums.

For further information regarding the Australian electoral system I encourage readers to go to the AEC website at www.aec.gov.au. In addition, the Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918, Referendum (Machinery Provisions) Act 1984 and the Australian Constitution are comprehensive sources of information about electoral and referendum processes.

I commend this Pocketbook to you and hope it provides a valuable resource regarding the 2010 federal election. I strongly encourage readers to complete the form on pages 212 and 213 if you would like to provide feedback on this publication.

1 The Australian Electoral Commission

On 21 February 1984, following major amendments to the Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918 (the Act), the AEC was established.

The AEC is the Commonwealth agency responsible for providing Australians with an independent electoral service and enhancing their understanding of, and participation, in the electoral process.

The AEC has one primary outcome for which it is funded, namely:

Maintain an impartial and independent electoral system for eligible voters through active electoral roll management, efficient delivery of polling services and targeted education and public awareness programs.

It achieves this through three programs:

- Program 1.1: Electoral Roll Management
Program Objective – Voter entitlement for Australians and support for electoral events and redistributions through maintaining an accurate and up-to-date electoral roll.
- Program 1.2: Election Management and Support Services
Program Objective – Access to an impartial and independent electoral system for Australians through the provision of election services.
- Program 1.3: Education and Communication
Program Objective – Informed Australians through the provision of information services on electoral matters.

2 Parliamentary representation

The Commonwealth Parliament consists of two houses, the Senate and the House of Representatives.

All Australians who are eligible to vote, choose people to represent them in both houses of parliament.

2.1 The Senate

When Australia became a Federation in 1901, the Senate was created with the intention of allowing each original state (NSW, Vic., Qld, WA, SA and Tas.) to be equally represented.

The electors in each state and territory elect a number of people to represent them in the Senate. Each state has an equal number of senators.

Initially, there were six senators elected from each state, giving a total of 36. There have been three increases in the size of the Senate since Federation. Legislation passed in 1948 increased the number from 36 to 60 (i.e. 10 per state), in 1974 from 60 to 64 when the ACT and the NT each gained two senators, and in 1983 from 64 to 76, i.e. 12 per state and two per territory. Changes took effect at the elections that followed.

Senators for each state are elected for six-year terms on a rotating basis, with half the senators retiring every three years (or facing a half-senate election). The terms of senators representing the ACT and the NT commence on the day of their election and expire at the close of the day immediately before the polling day for the next general election of members of the House of Representatives. The election of these senators is held at the same time as every general House of Representatives election.

2.2 The House of Representatives

The number of members elected to the House of Representatives for each state is proportional to the number of people of that state. Australia's Constitution, however, provides that the original states are to have a minimum of five members. The Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918 provides that at least one member is to be chosen in the ACT and the NT, and sets out a formula for determining the exact representation entitlements of the territories.

The political party, or coalition of parties, that can gain the support of a majority in the House of Representatives forms the Government. The Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are usually members of the House of Representatives.

Australia's Constitution provides that the number of members must be, as nearly as practicable, twice the number of senators.

Each member of the House of Representatives is elected to represent an area known as an electoral division or electorate. For the 2010 federal election, Australia was divided into 150 electoral divisions as follows:

NSW	48	SA	11
Vic.	37	Tas.	5
Qld	30	ACT	2
WA	15	NT	2

Each electoral division within a state or territory contains about the same number of people on the electoral roll. The electors in each division elect one person to represent them in the House of Representatives.

The maximum term of the House of Representatives is three years, taken from the date on which the newly elected House first meets. However, the Governor-General has the power to dissolve the House and call an election before the end of the three year period (see page 38, Commonwealth election timetable).

2.3 Representation in the territories

The NT and the ACT have not always been represented in Federal Parliament. The NT gained one member of the House of Representatives (with limited voting rights) in 1922 and it was not until 1968 that full voting rights were acquired.

Similarly, the ACT gained a member with limited voting rights in 1948. Full voting rights were acquired in 1966.

In the Senate, the territories were not represented until the 1975* election when they gained two senators each.

* The legislation was passed in 1974.

More detailed information on parliamentary representation, particularly on how the numbers of members and senators are determined, can be found in the Constitution (sections 7 and 24) and in the Act (sections 40–54). For an overview, see page 18 of this Electoral Pocketbook.

2.6 Electoral divisions – drawing the boundaries

For the House of Representatives, each state and territory is divided into electoral divisions. Population determines the number of divisions. To ensure continued equal representation, the boundaries of these divisions have to be redrawn (redistributed) periodically.

In deciding where the boundaries should be drawn, various factors are taken into consideration such as numerical quotas, means of communication, and community interest.

Timing of redistributions

A redistribution is necessary when:

- the number of parliamentary representatives to which a state or territory is entitled has changed due to population changes (see population quota on page 20),
- the number of electors in more than one third of the divisions in a state or one of the divisions in the ACT or the NT deviates from the average divisional enrolment by over 10% for a period of more than two consecutive months, or
- a period of seven years has elapsed since the previous redistribution.

The redistribution process

After the formal commencement of the redistribution, the enrolment quota (see page 21) must be struck. The Electoral Commissioner determines the quota by dividing the number of electors enrolled in the state or territory by the number of members of the House of Representatives to be elected in that state or territory at a federal election.

The Electoral Commission appoints a Redistribution Committee for the state or territory. This committee consists of the Electoral Commissioner and the Australian Electoral Officer (AEO) for the state/territory (except for the ACT where the senior Divisional Returning Officer for the territory is a member), the Surveyor-General and the Auditor-General for that state/territory.

The Electoral Commissioner invites interested people or organisations to submit suggestions about the redistribution within 30 days.

The suggestions are made available for public inspection. There is then a period of 14 days in which written comments on the suggestions may be lodged.

The Redistribution Committee makes a proposed redistribution, taking into consideration a number of factors detailed in the Electoral Act and the public suggestions and comments. Maps showing proposed boundaries and names of divisions, together with the reasons for the proposed redistribution, are published and publicly exhibited.

Following the notification of the initial proposed redistribution, there is a period of 28 days within which objections to the proposed redistribution may be lodged.

This is followed by a period of 14 days in which written comments on the objections can be submitted.

The augmented Electoral Commission for the state or territory considers objections to the proposed redistribution. The augmented Electoral Commission comprises the three members of the Electoral Commission, the AEO for the state/ territory (except for the ACT where the senior Divisional Returning Officer for the territory is a member) and the two state/ territory government representatives on the Redistribution Committee.

The augmented Electoral Commission has 60 days after the closing date for receipt of comments on initial objections to finish its considerations. After considering these objections, the augmented Electoral Commission publicly announces a proposed redistribution.

If the augmented Electoral Commission's proposed redistribution is significantly different from the proposal made by the Redistribution Committee, the augmented Electoral Commission invites further comments.

Having considered any further objections arising from these comments, the augmented Electoral Commission will make a final determination of boundaries and names of the electoral divisions in the particular state or territory. The final report is submitted to the Minister, and then tabled in both houses.

Quotas

The term 'quota' is used in two contexts in the redistribution process.

1 Population quota

This term is used when calculating the number of members of the House of Representatives to which a state or territory is entitled (i.e. the number of divisions).

Twelve months after the first meeting of the newly elected House of Representatives, the Electoral Commissioner is required to ascertain the population of the Commonwealth (excluding the territories) according to the latest official statistics published by the Australian Statistician. These figures are then used to determine how many members of the House of Representatives (divisions) each state is entitled. A similar exercise is used to calculate the entitlements of the territories.

The determination of representation entitlements at 17 February 2009 (as used for the 2010 federal election):

Step 1
$$\frac{\text{Total population of the six states}}{2 \times \text{number of senators for the states}} = \text{Quota}$$

(The population of the six states divided by twice the number of senators for the states.)

$$\frac{20\,807\,529}{72 \times 2 = 144} = 144\,496.7292 \text{ (as at 1.2.2009)}$$

Step 2
$$\frac{\text{Total population of individual state or territory}}{\text{Quota}} = \text{Number of members}$$

State	Population	Quota	Entitlement	Divisions
NSW	6 967 271	÷ 144 496.7292	= 48.2175	= 48
Vic.	5 297 567	÷ 144 496.7292	= 36.6622	= 37
Qld	4 279 450	÷ 144 496.7292	= 29.6162	= 30
WA	2 163 251	÷ 144 496.7292	= 14.9709	= 15
SA	1 601 827	÷ 144 496.7292	= 11.0856	= 11
Tas.	498 163	÷ 144 496.7292	= 3.4476	= 5*
ACT	344 744	÷ 144 496.7292	= 2.3858	= 2
NT	221 972	÷ 144 496.7292	= 1.5362	= 2
TOTAL				150

* The Constitution (s.24) states that at least five members shall be chosen from each of the original six states and Tasmania is therefore guaranteed a minimum of five members

In calculating Step 2, if the remainder is more than 0.5, the figure for the number of members is rounded up. If the remainder is less than or equal to 0.5, the figure is rounded down (i.e. 2.5 = 2 members, and 2.52 = 3 members).

For further information about the above calculations, please visit the redistributions page on the AEC website.

2 Enrolment quotas

There are two enrolment quotas calculated during the redistribution process:

- the current quota or average divisional enrolment, and
- the projected average divisional enrolment at the projection time (usually three years and six months after the expected completion of the redistribution).

The average divisional enrolment quota is determined as soon as practicable after the redistribution commences. It is calculated by dividing the number of people enrolled in the state by the number of members to which the state is entitled. The number of electors in each proposed division must not vary by 10% more or less than the quota.

The projected enrolment average is calculated by dividing the projected number of people enrolled in the state at the projection time by the number of members to which the state is entitled. As far as practicable, the number of electors in each division at the projection time should not vary by 3.5% more or less than the average number of projected electors.

For example, the quota for NSW was calculated as at 19 February 2009, the commencement date of the redistribution process, as follows:

$$\frac{\text{Number of electors enrolled in NSW (4 528 940)}}{\text{Number of divisions into which NSW is to be distributed (48)}} = 94\,353$$

Therefore the number of electors in each division could vary up to 10 per cent from 94 353. That is, the permissible maximum (+10%) would be 103 788 and the permissible minimum (- 10%) would be 84 918.

The projected quota for NSW was calculated as follows:

$$\frac{\text{Projected enrolment in NSW at 16.07.12 (4 747 516)}}{\text{Number of members NSW is entitled to (48)}} = 98\,907$$

Therefore, the projected average enrolment at July 2012 (i.e. the projection time, which is three and a half years time from the date the redistribution was expected to be completed) was 98 907 electors for each division in NSW. As far as practicable, the projected enrolments should not vary from this by more or less than 3.5 per cent (ie 103.5% = 102 369 or 96.5% = 95 445).

3 The electoral process

3.1 Events in Australian electoral history

Year	Australia's major electoral developments
Pre-Federation
1788	Prior to European settlement Australia was occupied by groups of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people led by elders and subject to traditional laws. European settlement occurred in 1788. Australia became a penal colony run by a governor (Autocratic Government).
1829	British sovereignty extended to cover the whole of Australia – everyone born in Australia, including Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders, became a British subject by birth.
1835	The Australian Patriotic Association, Australia's first political 'party', was established under W. C. Wentworth. It demanded democratic government for NSW.
1840	Adelaide City Council was established and Australia's first election was held on 31st October 1840.
1843	First parliamentary elections in Australia (NSW Legislative Council).
1850
1855	NSW, Vic. SA and Tas. are granted limited self government.
1856	The Australian version of the secret ballot was introduced in Vic., Tas. and SA. Its main defining feature was the government-supplied voting paper containing candidates' names. It was adopted around the world and became known as the Australian Ballot.
1857
1858
1859	Qld received self government.
1872
1890	WA received self government.
1891	Draft Constitution Bill for proposed federation of colonies.
1893
1895
1896
1899

Changes to the Franchise
(Who can vote)

Changes to voting methods
(How votes are cast)

Nearly 600 people cast votes in Adelaide City Council election.

Year	Australia's major electoral developments
Post-Federation
1901	Federation. In 1901 the colonies formed a new level of government known as the Federal Government. The first federal elections were held under State legislation with a coalition government between the Protectionist and State Labour parties being formed and Edmund Barton becoming Australia's first Prime Minister. Federal Parliament met for the first time in Melbourne, on 9 May 1901, with 75 Members of the House of Representatives (MPs) and 36 Senators (6 for each State).
1902	The first Commonwealth Parliament passed the Commonwealth Franchise Act of 1902 which was progressive for its time in granting universal adult suffrage (most men and women over 21). The Electoral Branch of the Home Affairs Department was established to conduct federal elections.
1903	First federal elections under federal law held on 16 December: 46.86% voter turnout. Divisional Returning Officers conducted first election under Commonwealth law in each electoral division.
1905	Electoral subdivisions created.
1906
1908	Permanent electoral rolls established.
1911	Legislation changed so that elections are to be held on Saturdays only.
1914	Full time Divisional Returning Officers appointed.
1915	Old State elections became the first to have compulsory voting.
1918	Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918 (followed by Commonwealth Electoral Act 1919). First use of preferential voting at Corangamite by-election 14 December 1918.
1919	First general election using preferential voting, 13 December 1919 (i.e. first Senate election under preferential voting).
1920	Nationality Act 1920 .
1921	Edith Cowan becomes first woman elected to any Australian Parliament after being elected to Legislative Assembly as member for West Perth in WA State selection.
1922	Grouping of names on Senate ballot papers introduced. The NT granted a Member of the House of Representatives with limited voting rights. Final general election in which voting was voluntary: 59.38% of electors voted.

(Who can vote)

Changes to voting methods
(How votes are cast)

State franchises applied at the first federal election (NSW, Vic., Qld, Tas. men over 21 years; SA and WA men and women over 21 years).

First past the post system used in all states except SA where a block voting system was used and Tas. where a single transferable voting system was used.

Enrolment and voting voluntary.

Most men and women over 21 were allowed to vote at federal elections. However, it specifically excluded any Aboriginal native of Australia, or the Torres Strait and South Sea Island of the Pacific (except New Zealand) from Commonwealth franchise unless already enrolled in a State. The Aboriginal franchise was further reduced in practice by admitting only those Australian Aboriginals already enrolled in a State in 1902.

Year Australia's major electoral developments

- 2010 Julia Gillard becomes Australia's first female Prime minister.
- Changes to the Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918 legislated. Provisions include:
- Electronic voting for vision impaired voters.
 - A single mobile polling provision to ensure that it can be delivered where and when it is needed.
 - Extended eligibility for early voting to electors who will be outside their home division on polling day and electors who fear for their safety.
 - Pre-poll votes cast within a voter's own division counted on election night rather than as part of declaration votes.
 - Electronic Enrolment Updates.
 - Electoral roll information in electronic form.
 - Removal of need for witness signature on postal vote applications.
- On 6 August, the High Court ruled that the provisions of the Act dealing with close of rolls were unconstitutional, and that the former period of seven days for all enrolment claims should apply with immediate effect.

Possible dates for the next federal election

House of Representatives

Section 28 of the Constitution defines the maximum term of the House of Representatives. In order to calculate the latest possible date for the next election the maximum number of days must be applied as follows:

- Three years from the first sitting day of the current Parliament (Constitution s.28) (27 September 2013)
- +10 days maximum to the issue of writs (Constitution s.32) (7 October 2013)
- +27 days maximum to the close of nominations (CEAs.156(1)) (3 November 2013))
- +31 days maximum to election day (CEA s.157) (4 December 2013). Election day must be on a Saturday, therefore 30 November 2013 is the last possible day.

Senate

The terms of senators elected in 2007 expire on 30 June 2014. Therefore, the next half-senate election must be held between 1 July 2013 and 30 June 2014. The earliest possible date for a half-Senate election is 3 August 2013. (1st Saturday after the 33 day minimum period from 1 July 2013).

Simultaneous elections

The elections for the House of Representatives and the Senate are usually held together. Given that a half-senate election cannot be held before 1 July 2013, the earliest possible date for a combined House of Representatives and half-senate election would be 3 August 2013 (1st Saturday after the 33 day minimum period from 1 July 2013).

While the latest possible date for a half-senate election is 24 May 2014, the latest possible date for a simultaneous election is the same date as is required for the House of Representatives. Therefore, 30 November 2013 is the latest possible date for the next simultaneous election.

Casual vacancies

Senators for each state are elected to serve for a fixed term of six years. If a vacancy occurs, for example by a senator resigning, the parliament of the state for which the senator was chosen chooses a person to fill the vacancy for the remainder of the term. If possible, the person chosen must be from the same political party as his or her predecessor. If the state parliament is not in session when the vacancy is notified, the governor, acting on the advice of the state executive council, may appoint a person to hold that place. An appointment by the governor expires 14 days from the beginning of the state parliament's next session.

Senators for the ACT and the NT are elected to serve a term that commences on the day of election and expires on the day before the polling day for a general election. If the place of an ACT senator becomes vacant, the Legislative Assembly of the ACT chooses a person to hold that place until the expiration of the term.

If the Legislative Assembly is not in session when the vacancy is notified, the Chief Minister may appoint a person to hold that place. If the place of an NT senator becomes vacant, the Legislative Assembly of the NT chooses a person to hold that place until the expiration of the term. If the Legislative Assembly is not in session when the vacancy is notified, the Administrator may appoint a person to hold that place.

Appointments made by the Chief Minister or the Administrator expire 14 days from the beginning of the next session of the relevant Legislative Assembly.

Between 1908 and 1972 there were a number of elections specifically to fill casual vacancies within the Senate. However, following the 1977 referendum on Senate casual vacancies, section 15 of the Constitution was altered and there will not be another election to fill a Senate casual vacancy.

3.3 Electoral enrolment

The electoral roll

The Commonwealth electoral roll is the list of the names and addresses of all people who have enrolled to vote at Australian elections. You cannot vote until you have enrolled.

Eligibility for enrolment

Enrolment and voting are compulsory for all Australian citizens who are 18 years of age or over. To enrol for the first time, eligible electors complete an electoral enrolment form. It is also important that eligible electors complete an electoral enrolment form each time they move address or change their name. These forms are available at all post offices and electoral offices. The enrolment SmartForm, an enrolment form which can be completed online, is available on the AEC's website and at australia.gov.au. Electors only need to fill out one form to enrol to vote in federal, state or territory elections and local government elections.

Following legislative change in 2010, people who are 16 years old may apply for electoral enrolment, and while their name is placed on the roll, they cannot vote until they turn 18. The only non-Australian citizens eligible to vote at federal elections in Australia are British subjects who were on the Commonwealth electoral roll on 25 January 1984, at which time the eligibility requirements were altered.

The following people are not entitled to enrol and vote:

- people who, by reason of being of unsound mind, are incapable of understanding the nature and significance of enrolment and voting
- prisoners serving a sentence of three years or more
- people who have been convicted of treason or treachery and have not been pardoned.

Keeping the electoral roll up to date

The electoral roll is continuously reviewed in an effort to ensure eligible people are enrolled and their enrolment details are correct. The review process takes a number of forms and includes the follow-up of change of address information obtained from external data sources, mailing to addresses which show no current enrolment, and targeted reviews of addresses by mail, telephone or field work. To encourage newly eligible electors to enrol, AEC staff attend citizenship ceremonies to collect enrolment forms. The AEC also undertakes enrolment stimulation activities targeted at young people and people who move address.

Public access to the electoral roll

The AEC provides an electronic copy of the entire roll in its offices for inspection by the public, free of charge.

Electors can also verify their enrolment details using the online enrolment verification facility on the AEC website. For the search to be successful, electors must enter their details exactly as they appear on the electoral roll.

The Act provides that Members of Parliament, political parties, approved medical researchers and public health screening programs may be supplied with confidential elector information. The AEC also provides roll information to entities that have reporting obligations under the Anti-Money Laundering and Counter-Terrorism Financing Act 2006 or entities that facilitate the carrying out of applicable customer identification procedures under that Act. Certain government agencies may also have access to confidential elector information for purposes allowed by the Privacy Act 1988. A full list of those agencies is available on the AEC website.

Close of rolls figures for federal elections 2001–2010

Close of rolls figures are finalised following the processing of all enrolment forms received by the date and time specified in the writ as the close of rolls.

Number of people entitled to vote at federal elections 2001–2010

The enrolment figures in the following table show the number of electors entitled to vote in the elections. These figures comprise enrolment at the close of rolls with subsequent adjustments such as the removal of the names of electors who died after the close of rolls, and the reinstatement of eligible electors previously removed from the roll.

Special enrolment

Special enrolment arrangements are available to electors who qualify. The following services may assist electors who have special needs:

- People who are unable to complete and sign their own enrolment form due to a physical disability may have someone help them complete their form and are able to apply to become general postal voters.
- People with no fixed address may apply for itinerant enrolment.
- People working in Antarctica can register as Antarctic electors to maintain their name on the roll and to make use of special voting arrangements at election time.
- Australian citizens resident on Norfolk Island may apply for special enrolment. Enrolment by eligible Norfolk Island residents is voluntary but, once enrolled, voting at federal elections is compulsory.
- People who believe that the publication of their address on the roll would put their own, or their family's, safety at risk may apply for silent enrolment so that their address is not shown on the roll.

- Members of the House of Representatives can choose to enrol in the electoral division that they represent and Senators can enrol in any division in the state or territory they represent.

Overseas enrolment

People who are already enrolled to vote at federal elections and are going overseas with an intention to return to Australia within six years, may apply to register as an overseas elector. This will ensure their name is not removed from the roll and they can vote while overseas.

Australian citizens who are overseas and not enrolled, but would have been eligible if they were in Australia, are able to enrol using an enrolment form called an Application for Enrolment from outside Australia. However, they must have left Australia less than three years ago, are going to be overseas for less than six years, and intend to return to Australia.

At 26 July 2010, the following number of voters had special enrolment:

State/ Territory	Provisional and turning 18 by polling day	Itinerant	Eligible overseas voter	Silent	Antarctic	Norfolk Islander

General postal voters

People who meet one or more of the conditions set out below may apply to be registered as general postal voters (GPVs) so that at election time they will be automatically sent postal voting material.

People generally may apply to become a GPV if they:

- Live more than 20km from the nearest polling booth
- Are in hospital, seriously ill or infirm and unable to travel

- Are living at home, seriously ill or infirm and unable to travel
- Are caring for a person (other than in a hospital) who is seriously ill or infirm and unable to travel
- Are physically handicapped
- Are serving a prison sentence or are under lawful custody or detention and are entitled to vote
- Have silent enrolment
- Are unable to attend a polling place because of religious beliefs
- Are a defence member, defence civilian or an Australian Federal Police officer serving outside Australia
- Are an eligible overseas elector.

Specific eligibility requirements are specified at section 184A of the Act.

Note that different conditions may apply for registration as a postal voter under state and territory electoral laws.

Further information on enrolment is available from any AEC office or on the AEC website.

Voter turnout

Turnout for the 2010 federal election was 93.22% for the House of Representatives and 93.83% for the Senate (see page 54 for historical statistics). Turnout was calculated by dividing the sum of formal and informal votes by the final enrolment figure. The final enrolment figure is the total number of people who are entitled to vote in an election.

The AEC believes calculating turnout in this way may result in a slight downward bias due to the substantial increase in declaration votes over the past several elections. This is because rejected declaration votes are not currently included in this calculation of voter turnout. If declaration votes received but subsequently rejected, and not admitted to the count, were to be included, the final voter turnout figures for the 2010 federal election would be 95.29%.

3.4 Candidates and nominations

Candidates must be nominated before they can be elected to the Senate or the House of Representatives. The qualifications for nomination to the Senate and the House of Representatives are the same.

A candidate must be at least 18 years old, an Australian citizen, and either an elector entitled to vote or a person qualified to become an elector.

Section 44 of the Constitution disqualifies certain people from being elected to the Parliament. This is a complex area that has been the subject of various legal challenges. The AEC can provide further information on this issue, but advises all prospective candidates to seek their own legal advice.

It is not possible to nominate until the writ for the election has been issued. Nominations must be made on the appropriate form and must be received by noon on the closing date for nominations (except for bulk nominations – see below). Nominations cannot be withdrawn after the closing date.

A candidate for the House of Representatives lodges their nomination with the Divisional Returning Officer (DRO) for the division in which they are standing. However, a registered political party may make a 'bulk nomination' of all endorsed House of Representatives candidates, within a particular state or territory. This must be lodged with the Australian Electoral Officer (AEO) for that state or territory at least 48 hours before the close of nominations.

Senate candidates lodge their nominations with the AEO for the state or territory in which they are standing.

Senate candidates are required to pay a $1 000 deposit on nomination and House of Representatives candidates pay $500.

The deposit will be refunded in a House of Representatives election if the candidate's total number of first preference votes is at least four per cent of the formal first preference votes for that division. The deposit will be refunded in a Senate election if the candidate's total number of first preference votes is at least four per cent of the formal first preference votes for that state or territory. The deposit is also refunded if the candidate is elected.

Where a candidate's name is included in a Senate group, their deposit will be refunded if they are elected, or the sum of the first preference votes received by all candidates in the group is at least four per cent of the formal first preference vote for that state/territory.

Nationally, 1 198 people nominated as candidates in the 2010 federal election.

The 2010 figure included 349 candidates for the Senate and 849 candidates for the House of Representatives. There were 845 male candidates and 353 female candidates.

3.5 Voting

Voting is compulsory at federal elections and referendums for all enrolled electors.

Polling day is always on a Saturday and voting takes place between 8am and 6pm.

Types of votes

Australians can vote by:

- Ordinary vote – a vote recorded by an elector on election day at a polling place within the electorate for which they are enrolled. This is the simplest way to vote and the method used by the majority of electors.
- Absent vote – votes cast by electors who are out of their electorate but still within their state or territory on election day. These votes may be cast at any polling place in the state or territory.
- Pre-poll vote – a vote recorded by a voter (that has declared their eligibility to make an early vote) made at an early voting at an early voting centre or an AEC divisional office. Pre-poll votes made within a voter's own electorate (pre-poll ordinary votes) are counted on election night. Those votes made outside a voter's electorate (pre-poll declaration votes) are counted during the declaration vote counts after election night.

For the 2010 election, electors who are blind or have low vision were able to cast a secret vote at any AEC divisional office or at a small number of early voting centres determined by the Electoral Commissioner. Votes were cast, via a call centre, for a period of up to three weeks prior to and on election day.

- Postal vote – electors who for various reasons cannot attend a polling place in the state or territory for which they are enrolled on election day can apply in writing for a postal vote. They will then be sent their ballot papers, which must be posted back before the close of polling.

- Provisional vote – a vote cast where an elector's name cannot be found on the certified list, or the elector's name is already marked off the certified list as having voted, or the elector is registered as a silent elector. Provisional votes are not entered into the count until evidence of identity has been provided and a check of entitlement has been completed. Provisional electors need to provide evidence of identity either at the polling place or to the AEC by close of business on the first Friday after election day.

Electors making a postal, pre-poll, absent or provisional vote must complete a declaration giving their personal details. Divisional staff will check their entitlement before the votes are counted.

Electors in many hospitals, some prisons, and in some remote areas, can cast a vote when visited by a mobile polling team.

Mobile polling is carried out during the 12 days up to and including election day.

How to vote

The electoral systems for the two houses of Australia's Federal Parliament are different.

House of Representatives

Candidates for the House of Representatives are elected using the preferential voting system. This system has been used in federal elections since 1918. Candidates stand for election in a particular electoral division. To be elected, a candidate must have more than half the formal votes cast for that division.

Members are elected for a maximum three-year term.

For the House of Representatives ballot paper, voters put a '1' in the box beside the candidate who is their first choice, '2' in the box beside their second choice and so on, until they have numbered every box. If any candidate gains more than 50% of the formal first preference votes (i.e. an absolute majority), he or she is elected. If no candidate has an absolute majority the voter's other preferences are taken into consideration. The distribution of preferences takes place in every division, even where a candidate already has a majority of first preference votes. For information on how House of Representative votes are counted see page 66.

Senate

Candidates for the Senate are elected using a proportional representation system also known as the 'single transferable vote' method. Candidates stand for election in a state or territory. To be elected, a candidate must receive a certain proportion of the votes, known as a quota.

It is a Constitutional requirement that each original state be equally represented regardless of its population. There are a total of 76 Senators: 12 for each state and two for each territory. Senators for each state are elected for six-year terms on a rotating basis with half of the senators retiring every three years (or facing a half-senate election).

The terms of senators representing the ACT and the NT commence on the day of their election and expire at the close of the day immediately before the polling day for the next general election. The election of these senators is held at the same time as every House of Representatives general election.

Forty Senate vacancies are contested at a half-Senate election when it is held simultaneously with a House election. When a double dissolution is declared all 76 Senate positions are made vacant.

The method of counting Senate votes is different to the House of Representatives. More information on how Senate votes are counted can be found on page 68.

The Senate ballot paper has two sections. An elector can either vote above-the-line or below-the-line, but not both. However, if the elector completes both sections formally, the below-the-line section takes precedence.

- Above-the-line – if a voter chooses to vote above-the-line, the number '1' must be written in one of the boxes in the top section of the ballot paper. All other boxes on the paper should be left blank. If an elector votes in the top section the vote will be counted in the way chosen by the group or party, and as notified to the AEC. This is called a group ticket vote and booklets are available at all polling places showing how each party or group has decided to have its preferences distributed. This information is also available on the AEC website prior to election day.
- Below-the-line – if a voter chooses to vote below-the-line, they must put a '1' in the box beside the candidate who is their first choice, '2' in the box beside their second choice and so on, until they have numbered every box.

Electors are issued with separate ballot papers for each election, green for the House of Representatives and white for the Senate.

3.6 Informal voting

A ballot paper is regarded as informal if it is not filled out correctly. These ballot papers are not counted towards any candidate but are set aside.

According to s. 268 of the Act, a vote is informal if:

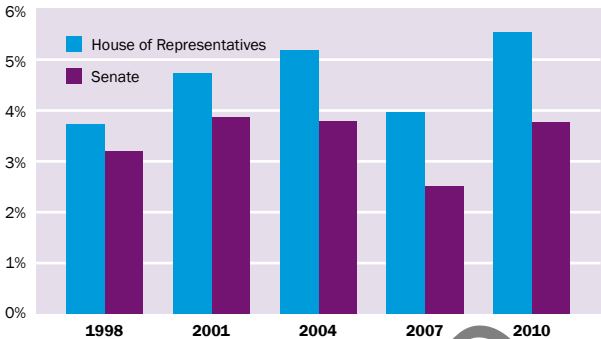

- the ballot paper is not marked at all
- the ballot paper does not have the official mark and has not been initialled by the polling official and the ballot paper is not authentic in the opinion of the DRO
- the ballot paper has writing on it which identifies the voter
- in the case of an absent vote, the ballot paper is not contained in the declaration envelope; and
- the voter has not marked a vote correctly for it to be considered acceptable.

3.7 Counting the votes (Scrutiny)

Counting the votes on election night

The counting of votes is known as the scrutiny and it is usually observed by scrutineers nominated by the candidates. The scrutiny commences on election day in each polling place after 6pm when the polling place has closed. In polling places, ordinary ballot papers and those pre-poll ballot papers made by voters within their own division (pre-poll as ordinary votes) are counted on election night.

When the House of Representatives election and the Senate election are held in conjunction, the House of Representatives ballot papers are counted before the Senate ballot papers. If a referendum is held in conjunction with an election, the referendum ballot papers are counted after those of the election.

Polling officials are required to complete four main tasks after the close of polls. They are required to:

- count the first preferences on the House of Representatives ballot papers
- conduct a two-candidate-preferred (TCP) count of the House of Representatives ballot papers
- count the first preferences on the Senate ballot papers
- count and sort any declaration vote envelopes received during the day (these remain unopened).

The first preference results for House of Representatives ballot papers are tabulated and phoned through to the DRO, along with the number of informal votes. The DRO enters the results for each polling place into the AEC's national computerised election management system. These results are electronically fed to the media and into the Virtual Tally Room (VTR) on the AEC website as well as being transmitted to the National Tally Room (NTR) in Canberra, where they are placed on the National Tally Board.

Polling officials then conduct an indicative distribution of preferences (a TCP count for the House of Representatives) between the two previously identified leading candidates, to give an indication of the likely outcome of the poll in that division.

Next, the first preference votes on the Senate ballot papers – above and below-the-line – are counted, phoned through to the DRO and entered into the election management system.

Declaration envelopes containing absent votes, pre-poll declaration votes (i.e. those pre-poll votes cast outside an electors division), postal votes and provisional votes are checked by divisional staff. These can be checked from the Monday prior to polling day. However, they are not opened or admitted to the count until after polling day.

Counting the votes for the House of Representatives

A House of Representatives candidate is elected if they gain an absolute majority – more than 50% – of the formal vote.

First, all of the number '1' votes are counted for each candidate. If a candidate gets more than half the total first preference votes, that candidate will be elected.

However, if no candidate has more than half of the votes, the candidate with the fewest votes is excluded. This candidate's votes are transferred to the other candidates according to the second preferences shown by voters on the ballot papers for the excluded candidate. If still no candidate has more than half the votes, the candidate who now has the fewest votes is excluded and the votes are transferred according to the next preference shown. This process continues until one candidate has more than half the total votes and is declared elected.

A distribution of preferences takes place in every division, even where a candidate already has an absolute majority of first preference votes. The result of this full distribution of preferences is used to calculate the two-party-preferred (TPP) statistics for divisions that have the Australian Labor Party (ALP) and Coalition representatives as the final two candidates.

In divisions that do not have the ALP and Coalition representatives as the final two candidates, a scrutiny for information is conducted to determine the TPP result. A scrutiny for information, in such cases, is a notional distribution of preferences to find the result of preference flows to the ALP and Coalition candidates.

Example of a distribution of preferences: Division of Lowe

Total Formal Vote: 49 805

					ELECTED

Counting the votes for the Senate

The Senate count is more complicated than a count for the House of Representatives. Counting of first preferences begins on election night but the full count cannot be completed until several weeks after the election.

Working out the quota

To be elected to the Senate, a candidate needs to gain a quota of the formal votes. The quota is calculated by dividing the total number of formal ballot papers by one more than the number of Senators to be elected and then adding '1' to the result (ignoring any remainder). This is how the quota for SA was calculated at the 2010 Senate election:

$$\frac{1\,009\,578}{(6 + 1)} + 1 = 144\,226^*$$

Therefore the quota, or number of votes required to be elected, in SA at the 2010 federal election was 144 226.

*Note: When determining the quota, any remainder is disregarded.

Counting the first preference votes

This is done as for a House of Representatives election: the papers are sorted according to which candidate has received the number '1' preference on each ballot paper. Candidates who receive the quota, or more, of these first preference votes are elected immediately.

As a general rule, when a candidate is elected with a surplus of votes, that surplus is transferred before any exclusions are undertaken.

Transferring the surplus

Any surplus votes these elected candidates receive (i.e. votes in excess of the quota they needed), are transferred to the candidates who were the second choice of voters. Because it is not possible to determine which votes actually elected the candidate and which votes are surplus, all the elected candidate's ballot papers are transferred at a reduced rate.

For example:

Candidate A gains 1 000 000 votes. If the required quota was 500 000 the surplus would be 500 000.

The transfer value therefore would be:

$$\frac{500\,000}{1\,000\,000} = 0.5$$

Candidate A's ballot papers (1 000 000) are then re-examined in order to determine the number of votes for second choice candidates.

If Candidate A's ballot papers gave 900 000 second preferences to Candidate B they would receive $900\,000 \times 0.5 = 450\,000$ votes which are added to the votes they received in count one.

If Candidate B is then over the quota, they are elected and their surplus votes transferred in the same way.

As a result of this process of transferring surplus votes, other candidates may be elected. However, if all surplus votes from elected candidates are transferred and there are still some unfilled positions, further counting is undertaken as explained below.

Exclusion of unsuccessful candidates

Starting with the candidate who has the lowest number of votes, unelected candidates are excluded from the count. Their ballot papers are distributed to the remaining candidates to whom the voters have given their preferences. If any of the remaining candidates obtains a quota through this process of distribution, they are declared elected. Their surplus (if any) is transferred before any other candidates are excluded. The above processes continue until all Senate positions are filled.

Group voting tickets

When a party or group lodges a group voting ticket, a box will be printed above-the-line on the Senate ballot paper. Voters wishing to vote according to the group voting ticket simply put a '1' in that box and their preferences will be allocated according to the group voting ticket of that party or group.

This method permits a voter to follow a party or group's registered ticket without the need to exhaustively copy out numbers in the correct order against each candidate's name (During the 2010 election there were between 9 and 84 Candidates per Senate ballot).

Information showing the order of preferences in the group voting tickets lodged with the AEC is available in the polling place and on the AEC website (ticket voting only applies to the Senate ballot paper).

The following table shows the extent of above-the-line voting at half-Senate elections in 2007 and 2010.

Recounts

A recount may be undertaken, approved, or directed at any time before the result of an election is declared. It should not be confused with the routine recheck (fresh scrutiny) of the House of Representatives or of Senate ballot papers during the days following an election.

Legal challenges

A candidate, a person qualified to vote at an election, or the AEC may dispute the validity of an election or return by addressing a petition to the High Court sitting as the Court of Disputed Returns. This must occur within 40 days of the return of the writ.

The legislative requirements for such petitions are set out in Part XXII of the Act. Candidates and voters intending to challenge an election are advised to seek their own legal advice.

3.8 Election funding and financial disclosure

The funding and disclosure provisions of the Act have been in operation since the 1984 election. They comprise two main components:

- public funding of election campaigns, and
- disclosure of certain financial details by candidates, registered political parties and other persons and groups (returns are submitted to the AEC).

Election funding

A candidate or Senate group is eligible for election funding if they obtain at least 4% of the first preference vote in the division or the state or territory they contested. The amount to be paid is calculated by multiplying the number of votes obtained by the current election funding rate. The funding rate for the 2010 federal election was 231.191 cents per House of Representatives and Senate vote. This rate is indexed every six months to increases in the Consumer Price Index.

Payment procedures

Election funding is paid in two stages. First, the AEC calculates the amount of election funding due based on the number of votes counted at the 20th day after election day and pays at least 95% of that amount. Second, once the vote counting is finalised, the AEC pays the remainder of the amount of election funding due. The total election funding paid at the 2010 federal election was $53 163 385.36.

For candidates and Senate groups endorsed by registered political parties, payments are made directly to their parties. Unendorsed candidates and Senate groups receive their payments direct, unless they have appointed an agent who is to receive the payment.

Election financial disclosures

Following an election, key participants in the electoral process are required to lodge with the AEC various returns disclosing certain election campaign transactions.

Summary of election returns

Participant	Type of return	Timeframe	Due date
Candidates	donations received and electoral expenditure	within 15 weeks after election day	by 6 December 2010
Senate groups	donations received and electoral expenditure	within 15 weeks after election day	by 6 December 2010
Donors	details of donations received, and donations made to candidates	within 15 weeks after election day	by 6 December 2010

All these returns are available for public inspection 24 weeks after election day. For the 2010 federal election that was from Monday 7 February 2011.

The AEC is required under subsection 17(2) of the Act to prepare a separate report for the Minister on the operations of the funding and disclosure provisions in relation to the 2010 federal election. Once tabled in parliament, this report will be available on the AEC website.

Annual financial disclosures

All registered political parties and each state or territory branch of a registered political party must submit an annual return to the AEC within 16 weeks of the close of the financial year. The return must show the total amount received, and the total amount paid, during the financial year and the total of outstanding debts as at 30 June. The names and addresses of persons from whom the party received, or to whom the party owed, more than the threshold, must also be disclosed.

Entities that are controlled by, or operate mainly for the benefit of, a registered political party must submit an annual return to the AEC within 16 weeks of the close of the financial year. Associated entities must disclose receipts, payments and debts in the same manner as political parties, and may additionally be required to disclose sources of capital deposits.

Persons or organisations that donated more than the threshold to a political party in the course of a financial year must submit an annual return to the AEC within 20 weeks of the close of the financial year detailing each donation.

Additionally, persons or organisations incurring more than the threshold of political expenditure are required to lodge an annual return within 20 weeks of the end of the financial year. These returns disclose totals of specified political expenditure incurred, as well as donations received.

Note: Recent thresholds for financial disclosure are:

- 2010–11, $11 500
- 2009–10, $11 200
- 2008–09, $10 900
- 2007–08, $10 500

Registered political parties

Parties that register may have their party names printed on the ballot papers next to their candidates and must also fulfil legislative requirements under the funding and disclosure provisions of the Act.

For federal elections, the register is closed from the day the writ is issued. For the 2010 federal election the register closed on 19 July 2010 with 25 separate political parties registered, plus an additional 24 branches from the four major parties.

Of these, 25 fielded candidates in the 2010 federal election (see page 56). This compares with 46 parties who fielded candidates at the 2007 federal election.

4.3 By-elections, referendums, supplementary elections and polls

By-elections

Whenever a vacancy occurs in the House of Representatives because of the death, resignation, absence without leave, expulsion, disqualification or ineligibility of a Member, a writ may be issued by the Speaker for the election of a new Member. A writ may also be issued when the Court of Disputed Returns declares an election void.

A by-election may be held on a date to be determined by the Speaker, or in the Speaker's absence from Australia, by the Governor-General in Council. The polling must take place on a Saturday.

The Acting Speaker performing the duties of the Speaker during the Speaker's absence from the Commonwealth may also issue a by-election writ. The Chairman of Committees as Deputy Speaker has also issued a writ during the Speaker's absence from the Commonwealth, and the Chairman of Committees as Deputy Speaker has informed the House of the Speaker's intention to issue a writ.

There are no constitutional or statutory requirements that writs be issued for by-elections within any prescribed period.

The following cases have occurred:

- with a general election pending, the Speaker has declined to issue a writ in order to avoid the need for two elections within a short period of time, and
- a writ has been issued and then withdrawn by the Speaker when a dissolution of the House of Representatives has intervened.

The guiding principle in fixing the date of a by-election has always been to hold the election as early as possible so that the electors are not left without representation any longer than is necessary.

Supplementary elections

A supplementary election must be held if a candidate for a House of Representatives election dies in the period between close of nominations and election day, as the election is deemed to have failed. A new writ is issued for another election in that division, but the election is held using the electoral roll prepared for the original election. This provision is found in s. 181 of the Act.

Section 181 was introduced in its current form in 1928 following the automatic election of Nationalist Party candidate, Mr G Francis, to the safe Labor seat of Kennedy after the death of the Labor candidate, Mr Charles McDonald, the day before election day in the 1925 general election. As only two candidates nominated for the seat (from the Labor and Nationalist parties) the Nationalist member was automatically elected under the law of the day.

The first supplementary election occurred in the division of Hume in 1972, but as it was held on the same day as the 1972 general election (2 December), it was not classified as a separate election. This could not happen now because of the minimum 33-day timetable between the issue of the writ and election day.

If a candidate for a Senate election dies in the period between close of nominations and election day, and the number of remaining candidates is not greater than the number of candidates to be elected, those candidates are declared elected. However, if the remaining candidates are greater in number than the number of candidates to be elected, the election proceeds. A vote recorded on a Senate ballot paper for the deceased candidate is counted to the candidate for whom the voter has recorded the next preference, and the numbers indicating subsequent preferences are regarded as altered accordingly.

Constitutional Referendums

The Australian Constitution can be amended only with the approval of Australian electors. Therefore, any proposed alteration must be put to the vote of all electors at a referendum.

Section 128 of the Constitution provides that any proposed law to alter the Constitution must be passed by an absolute majority in both Houses of the Commonwealth Parliament. If passed by both Houses, it is submitted to a referendum at least two months, but less than six months, after it has been passed by Parliament. In certain circumstances, a proposed amendment can be submitted to a referendum if it is passed on two separate occasions by only one House of the Parliament.

At the referendum the proposed alteration must be approved by a 'double majority'. That is:

- a national majority of electors in the states and territories
- a majority of electors in a majority of the states (i.e. at least four out of six states).

Since Federation, only eight out of 44 proposals to amend the Constitution have been approved (see below).

Voting in referendums is compulsory for enrolled electors.

In referendums voters have to write either 'Yes' or 'No' in the box opposite each question on the ballot paper.

National song poll

The only other national issue, which was not a proposal to amend the Constitution, was the poll for a national song, held on 21 May 1977.

Voting in the poll for the National Song was voluntary.

Preferential voting was used, as for a House of Representatives election, and after the distribution of preferences, Advance Australia Fair became the national song.

The other songs that were listed on the ballot paper were God Save The Queen, Song Of Australia and Waltzing Matilda.

Senator Shayne Murphy, Independent (formerly ALP 1 July 1993 to 2 October 2001)

^ Senator Nick Xenophon, stood as a non-affiliated candidate

* While senators elected at double dissolutions take their seats immediately, section 13 of the Constitution deems their terms to have started on 1 July preceding the election. This enables the terms and rotation of senators to continue to be calculated in July

 The National Party of Australia figures include the National Country Party before the 1983 federal election

 The size of the Senate was increased to 76 on 8 December 1983 by the Representation Act 1983

† Senator Julian McGauran resigned from the National party in February 2006 and joined the Liberal party. This change has been reflected in the Senate makeup

Summary of first preference votes by group

The tables on pages 99–102 show the number of votes cast for parties and other candidates by state, territory and nationally.

Votes obtained by each party are expressed as a percentage of the total formal vote for the state or territory. The numbers of formal and informal ballot papers are expressed as percentages of the total number of votes cast for that state or territory. This latter total (or the turnout) is expressed as a percentage of the state or territory enrolment shown at the top of each table.

The enrolment figures shown in these tables give the number of electors entitled to vote in the 21 August 2010 federal election. These figures comprise close of rolls enrolment figures with subsequent adjustments such as in the case of the death of an elector or the reinstatement of an eligible elector previously removed from the roll in error.

The percentage column expresses each party's votes as a percentage of the total formal first preference votes, the number of formal and informal votes as a percentage of the total votes, and the number of total votes as a percentage of enrolment.

The state or territory 'quota' is shown on the top right-hand corner of each Senate table.

* This figure represents the total votes cast expressed as a percentage of the enrolment for the State, Territory or the nation – also known as 'turnout'

Two-party-preferred figures

The tables on pages 105–108 show:

- The number of votes and the percentage of total votes received by the ALP and the Coalition (Liberal/National) parties.
- The swing for or against the previous ALP government.

By convention, the TPP statistics are calculated between the ALP and the major coalition parties (Liberal/National).

Results by electoral division

This section gives an overview of the 2010 federal election results for each division. Candidates are listed in the order they appeared on the ballot paper for each division.

General information is also provided on each division including origin of name, demographic classification, seat status, area in square kilometres and the number of people enrolled to vote at the 2010 federal election. The candidate who was elected is listed in bold text while the ‘•’ symbol denotes the previous member.

Demographic classification of divisions is based on the following criteria:

- Inner Metropolitan – situated in capital cities and consisting of well-established built-up suburbs.
- Outer Metropolitan – situated in capital cities and containing large areas of recent suburban expansion.
- Provincial – outside capital cities, but with a majority of enrolment in major provincial cities.
- Rural – outside capital cities and without majority of enrolment in major provincial cities.

Seat status is generally based on the two-party-preferred results of the last election. However, in seats where Labor and the Coalition were not the final two candidates, the seat status is based on the two-candidate-preferred result (e.g. marginal independent).

The two-party-preferred figure refers to the number of votes received by the Labor and Coalition candidates after a full distribution of preferences. The two-candidate-preferred figure refers to the number of votes received by independent and major party candidates after a full distribution of preferences.

Where a winning candidate receives less than 56% of the vote, the seat is classified as ‘marginal’; 56–60% is classified as ‘fairly safe’; and more than 60% is considered ‘safe’.

The percentage column expresses each candidate’s votes as a percentage of total formal first preference votes. Also shown is the number of formal and informal votes as a percentage of the total votes and the number of total votes as a percentage of enrolment.

5 Glossary and indexes

5.1 Glossary

Act	The Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918 . This is the legislation governing the Commonwealth electoral process.
Australian Electoral Commission (AEC)	The Commonwealth agency responsible for providing Australians with an independent electoral service and enhancing their understanding of, and participation in, the electoral process.
Australian Electoral Officer (AEO)	The AEC's manager in each state and the NT. An AEO for the ACT is only appointed for each election period. The AEO is the returning officer for the Senate election in their state or territory.
Absent vote	Votes cast by electors who are out of their electorate but still within their state or territory on election day. These votes may be cast at any polling place in the state or territory. An absent vote is a type of declaration vote.
Absolute majority	In a House of Representatives election, a candidate must gain more than half the formal votes to be elected. This is known as an absolute majority. Often this involves the distribution of preferences.
Ballot	A method of secret voting, normally in a written form.
Ballot paper	A paper that shows the names of the candidates who are standing for election and on which voters mark their vote.

By-election	An election held to fill a single vacancy in the House of Representatives. Between federal elections, vacancies result from death, resignation, absence without leave, expulsion, disqualification or ineligibility of a member.
Candidate	A person standing for election to the Senate or House of Representatives.
Casual vacancy	If a Senator retires or dies, the casual vacancy is filled by a person chosen by the joint sitting of the Houses of Parliament of that state until the expiration of the term. The person chosen must be of the same political party as the predecessor.
Certified list of voters	The official electoral roll used on election day to mark off electors' names. The list contains the names and addresses of all eligible electors for that division for the particular electoral event. Polling officials place a mark against an elector's name when the elector is issued with ballot papers at a polling place to indicate that the elector has voted.
Close seat	A term used while counting votes to describe a seat where the results are tight. On election night, this is where the TCP result is between 47% and 53% and more than 5% of the vote has been counted. After election night and until counting is completed, this is where the TCP result is between 49.5% and 50.5% and more than 5% of the vote has been counted.
Constitution	The set of basic rules by which a country or state is governed. In Australia's case it is a document written in the 1890s that sets out the structure of Australian federal politics. The Constitution can only be amended through a constitutional referendum.

Constitutional referendum	A proposal to alter the Constitution is put to the vote. At a referendum the proposed alteration must be approved by a double majority: a national majority of electors in the states and territories; and a majority of electors in a majority of states.
Court of disputed returns	A candidate, an elector or the AEC may dispute the validity of an election by a petition to the High Court which sits as the Court of Disputed Returns.
Declaration vote	Any vote where, instead of the elector being marked off the certified list on election day, the vote is sealed in an envelope signed by the voter. Absent, early votes made outside the voter's electorate (pre-poll declaration), provisional and postal votes are all types of declaration votes.
Division or Electorate	Australia is divided into voting areas, which are known as divisions or electorates. One member is elected from each division to the House of Representatives.
Divisional Returning Officer (DRO)	The AEC officer responsible for maintaining the roll and conducting the election in each division. The DRO is the returning officer for the House of Representatives election in their division.
Election Results Code	The election results code is a short code allocated to each registered political party. It is primarily for internal use but is also used in some AEC publications, including election results, to assist with brevity.
Electoral roll	The list of people entitled to vote in an election or referendum. Also referred to as the roll.

Electorate or Division	Australia is divided into voting areas, which are known as electorates or divisions. One member is elected from each division to the House of Representatives.
Enrolment	You cannot vote at an election unless your name is on the electoral roll. Australian citizens 18 years of age and over (with a few exceptions) must enrol to vote.
Electoral Commissioner	The officer who performs the functions of the chief executive officer of the AEC.
Fairly safe seat	A term used after counting has been completed to describe a seat where the winning candidate received between 56–60% of the vote.
Federal election	Refers to a general election of the House of Representatives and the election of the Senate.
Federation	The unification of Australian Colonies which formed the Australian nation on 1 January 1901.
Funding and Disclosure (FAD)	This scheme was introduced for the 1984 federal election and has two main parts: public funding of election campaigns and disclosure of certain financial details by candidates, political parties and other persons and groups who submit returns to the AEC.
Formal vote	A vote cast in an election or referendum that has been marked according to the rules for that election or referendum and can be counted towards the result. A ballot paper not marked correctly is called informal.
Franchise	The right to vote.

General Postal Voter (GPV) An elector who is registered to have postal ballot papers sent to him or her automatically. Electors from certain categories who have difficulty getting to a polling place on election day can register as a GPV.

Group Voting Ticket (GVT) A GVT sets out the order in which a Senate group wants its preferences distributed. GVTs are registered with the AEC after the draw for positions on the Senate ballot paper. If a voter chooses to put the number '1' in one of the boxes above-the-line on a Senate ballot paper, the preferences will be distributed according to the group's GVT.

House of Representatives At Federation, the House of Representatives was formed as the People's House and is the House in which the government is formed. Each division elects one Member of the House of Representatives under a preferential voting system. The numbers of Members are in proportion to the number of people in each state or territory, except that at least 5 Members must be chosen in each original state. The House of Representatives currently has 150 Members.

How-to-vote cards Cards handed out to voters by party workers at polling places on election day showing how a party or a candidate would like voters to fill in their ballot papers.

Informal vote A ballot paper is generally considered informal if it is not filled out correctly in accordance with the Act and the instructions on the ballot paper. It cannot therefore be included in the scrutiny/count.

Marginal seat A term used after counting has been completed to describe a seat where the winning candidate received less than 56% of the vote.

Mobile polling team	A team of polling officials who bring the polling to the elector. Teams visit some hospitals and nursing homes, prisons, remand centres and remote locations to enable electors to vote.
Nomination	Candidates must be nominated before they can be elected to the Senate or House of Representatives. Qualifications for nomination are set out in the Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918 and the Constitution. Nominations can be made once the writ for an election has been issued and before the time and date specified as the close of nominations. For each nomination a financial deposit must be lodged.
Ordinary vote	A vote recorded by an elector on election day at a polling place within the division for which they are enrolled. This is the simplest way to vote and the method used by the majority of electors.
Parliament	The political assembly in which elected representatives talk about and vote upon proposed laws.
Plebiscite	An issue put before the electorate that does not affect the Constitution. The result of the plebiscite vote may, or may not, bind the government according to the enabling legislation.
Political party	Political parties registered with the AEC: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ can have their party name on the ballot paper, ■ have entitlements to electoral roll information, ■ have obligations in regard to financial disclosures.

Postal vote Electors who, for various reasons, cannot attend a polling place in the state or territory for which they are enrolled on election day can apply in writing for a postal vote. They will then be sent their ballot papers, which must be posted back before the close of polling.

Preferential voting A system of voting in which the voter completes the ballot paper by putting the number '1' in the box beside the candidate of their first choice, the number '2' beside their second choice and so on until every box is numbered consecutively.

Pre-poll vote A vote, recorded by a voter eligible to do so, at a divisional office or pre-poll voting centre in the lead up to polling day. Certain pre-poll voting centres also open on polling day for the casting of interstate votes only.

Pre-poll votes made by an elector within their own division (pre-poll ordinary) are counted with ordinary votes on polling night.

Proportional representation The term that describes a group of electoral systems used to elect candidates in multi-member electorates. In such systems parties, groups and independent candidates are elected to the parliament in proportion to their support in the electorate.

Provisional vote

A vote cast where:

- an elector's name cannot be found on the certified list,
- the voter's name is already marked off the certified list as having voted, or
- the voter is registered as a silent elector.

Provisional votes are not entered into the count until evidence of identity has been provided and a check of entitlement has been completed. Provisional voters need to provide evidence of identity either at the polling place or by close of business on the first Friday after election day.

Quota – Senate

To be elected to the Senate, a candidate needs to gain a quota or proportion of the first preference votes. The quota is determined by dividing the total number of formal ballot papers in the state or territory by one more than the number of senators to be elected and adding one to the result and disregarding any remainder.

Quota – Redistribution (entitlement)

The calculation used to determine the number of parliamentary representatives to which a state or territory is entitled (ie the number of divisions).

Quota – Redistribution (enrolment)

The current and projected average divisional enrolment for the state or territory.

Redistribution

The redrawing of electoral boundaries to ensure that there are approximately the same number of electors in each division in the state or territory.

Safe seat

A term used after counting has been completed to describe a seat where the winning candidate received more than 60% of the vote.

Scrutineer	A person appointed by a candidate to observe the voting and counting of the votes. Candidates can appoint scrutineers for each polling place. Scrutineers have the right to be present when the ballot boxes are sealed and opened and when the votes are sorted and counted so that they may check any possible irregularities, but they may not touch any ballot papers.
Scrutiny	The counting of votes which leads to the election result.
Seat	Another term for an electorate or division – used because the candidate elected then has a seat in parliament.
Senate	The Senate was formed as the States' House or house of review. The states are represented equally in the Senate regardless of the size of their populations and each Senator represents the whole state or territory. There are 76 senators; 12 from each state and two from each territory, elected under a proportional representation system.
Senate election	Is an election of Senators for a State or Territory.
Silent elector	An elector who has applied to have their address not appear on the roll for reasons of personal safety or safety of their family members.
Swing	The difference between the performance of a candidate or party at one election in comparison to another.
Surplus	Votes gained by a Senate candidate which are surplus to the quota required for election.

Turnout	The percentage of people who voted in the election, calculated by dividing the sum of formal and informal votes by the final enrolment figure. The final enrolment figure is the total number of people who are entitled to vote in an election. Please refer to explanatory note on page 53 for additional information.
Two-candidate-preferred (TCP) count	These figures show where preferences have been distributed to the likely final two candidates in a House of Representatives election. In most cases, but not all, these will be from the two major sides of politics – the Australian Labor Party and the Liberal and National Parties Coalition.
Two-party-preferred (TPP) count	These figures indicate results where preferences have been distributed to the two major sides of politics – the Australian Labor Party and the Liberal and National Parties Coalition. In most cases the TCP and TPP are the same because the final two candidates are from the Australian Labor Party and the Liberal and National Parties Coalition. In a division held by an independent or a minor party, the counts will differ.
Virtual Tally Room (VTR)	A web based election results system that provides election information and results in a user-friendly format.
Writ	A writ is a document commanding an electoral officer to hold an election and contains dates for the close of rolls, the close of nominations, the election day and the return of the writ. The Governor-General issues the writs for House of Representative elections and elections for senators in the territories. The state governors issue the writs for all other Senate elections.
