I object to the proposal to abolish the electorate of Higgins.

Not only has Higgins been a significant source of balanced decisions over the nearly 100 years of its existence, but there are numerous other electorates whose demise would scarcely be noticed.

It is arguable that the proposal has been fomented by left wing influence. It certainly looks that way, as does the like proposal in Sydney. The impartiality - or not - of the electoral commission will be judged by these decisions.
